THE EPISTLE

TO THE

READER.

Reader,

I Shall here present you with a mournful Account of the afflicted State of Hungaria, Austria, and other Christian Countries, now groaning under the Oppression of the Turkish Sword, for at this time (as it has been always observed, and indeed the only Policy by which the Ottoman Empire has arrived to its Extent and Greatness) the present Emperour Mahomet Han, the Fourteenth Monarch of the Turks, moved thereto for vainglory, and to get him a Name equal to that of his Ancestors; an Ambition much Sought by the Turkish Monarchs) taking the advantage of the Christians Divisions amongst themselves, (athing alwayes fatal to Christendom, and a furtherance to the Ottoman Affairs, as giving their Arms a more easie progress, which Division the Turks impute to proceed from the Effects of their Prayers to their Impostor Mahomet, whom they stile their Intercessor) has for some years past wounded deep the Roman Empire, now grown weak by the many streams of Blood drawn by Civil Broils, and bandying against its powerful Christian Neighbours; insomuch that at this day those barbarous Infidels triumph and revel, not only in the Cities of Hungary and Crotia, but even in the chief Cities of Austria, the only Bulwark of the Empire; to defend which, in former times, some Millions of Lives have been loft. And thus

thus far have they advanced without any colour or warrant for their proccedings, more than a pretence of Piety, to affist the rebellious Hungars, under the Leading of their obstinate and turbulent General, Count Teckely, a man whom no Favours, Concessions, or Indulgences of his Lawful and Natural Prince can prevail upon, or work to a Submission or Reconciliation; but desirous of that pe-Wilent Bain, Greatness, rather than go without it, he, with an unrelenting heart, dares made to it through the Bornels of his bleeding Countrey, and help the Infidels in their Cruelty; though most are of opinion, and not without good grounds, that the Turk, having obtained his Ends, and glutted himself with the Treason, the Traytor will be of no further use, and if Suffered to live, it will be past doubt in Confinement: for 'tis a true Maxim in Potentates, They love the Treafon, son, but the Traytor they hate. And now, fince upon the great Events of this War the Eyes of all men are fixed, (for indeed it concerns the whole Christian World) I have thought fit, for the better Information and Satisfaction of my Countrey-men, to give an impartial account of the Transactions and Events of the difastrous War, whose End is yet uncertain; for if the Infidels, now powerful in the Field, and strongly ingarrisoned in many commanding Civies, bave not a Stop put to their Incroachment by the speedy uniting and combination of the Christian Princes, or from the immediate hand of Heaven, the German Empire will run a hazard to be greatly shattered and dismembred, if not totally lost, which Heaven prevent. And certainly, the miserable slaughters and captivities already made, ought to incline the most ambitious Prince, if not for his Neighbour's Sake,

Take, yet for his own, and his Countreys Preservation, and by timely oppoling the Torrent, damm up that Stream, that with impetuous Violence feeks to overflow all before it, and be a warning to other Christian Nations, of what they must expect, if the Infidels are permitted to proceed, and uncontrouled, in a manner, made through Blood and Slaughter, destroying with Fire and Sword all pleasant Places as they pass, glorying in nothing more than to trample under foot, and tread upon the Necks of the distressed Christians; whom, like a Flock of Sheep, they drive before them like Wretches destined for flaughter, or perpetual Bondage, at the pleasure of the Tyrant. But to come nearer to my purpose;

Reader, I shall in this Tract prefent you with the Series of the War, as it has been transacted, either in A 2 Bat-

Battels, Skirmishes, burning of Towns and Villages, Sieges, Ravages, taking of Prisoners, Contributions, and Exactions, the numbers of the slain, as they occur, and divers other Matters, but more especially the Siege of the great City of Vienna, so long the Imperial Seat of the German Empire, and chief City of Austria, relating exactly, as it has come to my hand, the divers passages happening during the said Siege.

Lastly, I shall present you with a brief Compendium of Turkish Cruelties both in Peace and War, to such Christians as they carry into miserable Bondage; and many other things which I here for brevities sake omit to mention; but shall at large in the following History expose to view. And so with my hearty Prayers to Almighty God to put a stop to the progress of this Tyrant, by sending a Spi-

Spirit of Unity and Concord amongst the Christian Princes, that all as one man, they may unite their Forces for the preservation of what yet remains free in Christendom.

Reader, I remain

Yours to serve You,

Between the Turks and Imperials

HUNGARIA, AUSTRIA, &c.

time fought for an opportunity to increach upon Christendom, he, in order to effect the fame, by fundry means tempted the Hungarian Male-contents, prone enough of themfelves to take up Arms against their Lawful Sovereign, under the specious pretences of Liberty of Conscience, free Exercise in Religion, and casting off the Imperial perial Jurisdiction, in renouncing Obedience to the Emperour. And to carry on that Defign, allured Teckely, their Ring-leader, with many specious Promiles, to rise in Rebellion; who, ambitious of Preferment and Advancement to the Title of Prince of Transylvania, or King of Hungaria, more than any motive to promote, preferve, or propagate the Reformed Religion, drawing after him a great number of his Followers, feized upon many Villages, and by Surprize, took some Fortresses in Crotia, and the Borders of Hungary on that fide, which drew a great number of the difaffected to take part with him: So that he came formidable e're the News of the Rebellion had reached the Emperours Ears, being all along affifted under-hand by the Turks with Money and Munition, notwithstanding there was peace between the two Empires. But certain it isthat, then accent laying is most apparent; viz. That the Turks never kept any League longer than it tends to their Advantage.

To heighten the Design, whilst the Turks on the one part were casting in

Thoughts

Thoughts the future War, the Christian Princes were as earnestly involved in a War amongst themselves, rather seeking to destroy each other then mindful of the common Enemy, who all the while was undermining the Roman Empire; till at length his Imperial Majesty perceiving the drift of the Ottoman Sultan, used his Diligence to frustrate his Design, first by immediately dispatching Orders to his Ambassador at the Port to complain of the Bassa's of Buda and Effen, for affisting his Rebel-Subjects, and to defire that a right Understanding might be continued between the two Empires, and the Peace inviolably observed; and at the fame time published divers Edicts or Declarations, expressing his Willingness to pardon the Rebels if they would return to their former Obedience; as likewife, how ready he was to fatisfie his Subjects of that his Hereditary Country of Hungaria in all their reasonable Demands, and would alow them a competent number of Churches, wherein they should have the free exercise of their Religion, with fuch Privileges as his Roman Catholick Subjects of that Kingdon injoyed. In answer answer to the first he received many fair Promises, and from the Grand Visier, an assurance of an amicable Correspondence, right Understanding, and an inviolable League between the two Empires; with a Promise, that no farther Assistance should be given to the Hungarian Rebels; but, that if upon inquiry the Baffas, Sanzacks, or Governours of any Garrison in Hungaria, or on the Frontires, should understand or openly affilt the Rebels, he or they should incur the Grand Seigniors high Displeasure, and confequently, be punished with Death; though at the same time the Bassa of Buda had private orders from the Port to countenance the Rebels, and keep them in Heart till matters were Ripe for the Turk h Sword to put in.

The effects of the second device, or intention of the Emperour to countermine the Turk, succeeded no better, or indeed rather worse, for although some honest Persons, and many of the Hungarian Gentry, who had been unadvisedly drawn into the Rebellion, did embrace the Imperial Grace and Favour, laying down their Arms, and retiring to their respective

respective Habitations, yet Teckely and his followers, who had absolutely, as most imagine, determined to have no Peace (had the Emperour granted more than themselves demanded) held out to oppose, whom divers Troops were sent under the command of Count Caprara, and other Captains, to repress them, and another Edict published, to oblige them to come in, promising them a Palatine of their own Nation; and that in case of Offices and Places of Trust, no distinction should be made between his Subjects of either Religion.

Upon these Proposals, the Turks searing the Malecontents might come to the Emperours Propositions, and that by their differting their Leaders, and laying down their Arms, might hinder their Designs, they resolved to be fishing whilst the Water was troubled; and thereupon began to take off the vizard and appear more openly to countenance the Rebellion, the great Bussa sending Supplies of Men and Money to the Rebels frequently: and when a second complaint was made at the Port, by the Count Caprara, the Imperial Ambassador there residing.

ding, he found the face of Things changed, and War filently threatned. The Grand Seignior having throughout his Asian and African Territories caused Men to be raised, and summoned such as held Land of him to serve in the War, to repair with Horse and Arms to the general Randezvous near Constantinople, hanging out the Horse taile, thereby signifying himself intended to take the Field.

The Emperour, advised of these Preparations, drew feveral Detachments out of his Army, incamped near the Rhine to have an Eye upon the French, who had possessed themselves of Strasburg, an Imperial free City: the Forces were fent under the leading of the Count Staremberg to joyn Count Caprara; who with a Body of 7000 had secured the Passes of the Waag. and a Commission directed to the Palatine to raise the Ban, and the Arrear Ban of the Kingdom, whilst the electoral Princes met at Oldenburg, to confult what measures were to be taken in order to the preservation of Hungaria, and quieting the Rebellion, being earnestly pressed thereto by his Imperial Majesty.

Things being at this pass, divers Skirmishes passed between Parties in Hungaria, with various Success, when as to strengthen himself, and the better to Ingratiate with the Hungarians, he having married the Princels Ragozki, and received a new supply from the Bassa of Offen, which Bassa with 15000 Turks had likewife took the Pield; he drew down before Chasehaw, and, after six or seven days battering it, had it surrendred; the Garrison being permitted to depart with Bag and Bagage; heightned with this Succeis, he braved the Imperial General, being by his own Faction faluted King of Hungary, and to fecure his Wives Patrimony, put a strong Garrison into Mongasa, furnmoning the Hungarian Nobility and Gentry to attend him in Arms at a general Randesvonz near Levents; but, they weighing their Duty & Allegiance to their Sovereign, few of them came; whereupon Parties were fent out to burn and plunder the Houses of divers of them, one of which Parties Count Strafoldo meeting with, utterly defeated them, killing fixty on the Place and taking 100 Prisoners.

During these Transactions, the Vizier Bassa having drawn 20000 Horse and Foot into the Field, besieged Zathmar; and Count Tekely sat down before Esperies, which he upon the first Summons had furrendered into his Hands; and after that belieged Lewents: the Rumour of which did not a little alarm the Imperialifts, when, the better to flay the Progress of the Enemy, and to prevent the Transylvanian Princes joyning with Teca kely, who for that purpose had mustered 11000 Horie and Foot, the greatest part of them Tartars, who had a little before passed the Neister. The Imperial Troops in Moravia, Silefia, and Behemia, together with the Troops in the other Hereditary Countries of the Empire, marched to Wang to reinforce the Imperial Camp, upon which Tedely, doubting the Success of their Arms, fent his Deputies to Count Carrara, to defire that he might fend to the Emperour to treat about a Truce, and that in order thereto he might have Pasports of fafe Conduct allowed him whom he should imploy in that Affair, the which, after some difficulty, he obtained, and a Cessation for fix weeks weeks was concluded; but, Teckely find-ing the Power of the Turks increase, and having 1000 Fanizaries allow'd him for the Guard of his Person, though at the fame time there was an evil Understanding between him and the Prince of Transylvania, the latter being jealous that the former would be by the Grand Seignior invested in his Principality. He, I say, notwithstanding, adventured to break the Truce e're it was half expir'd, by committing divers Hostilities, burning and destroying many Villages; Then fetching a Compass about, he covered with his Army Villecke, whilft the Baffa of Buda belieged it with 25000 Turks and Tartars, which City made a long and brave Refistance, but in the end, perceiving no releif at hand, and most of their Provision and Ammunition spent, they capitulated with the befreged; the Souldiers and Townsmen doing it without the confent of the Governour, and on the fixteenth of September 1682 surrendred it into the hands of the Biffa, and all but the Governour suffered to March out with Bag and Bagage, the Governour by reason of his not consenting to fign the Capitulation

Capitulation he was made a Prisoner of War.

To this Town Teckely layed claim, alledging that the Grand Seignior had promised that such Places as were taken in Hungary during the War, should be furnished with Hungarian Garisons, which occasioned a sharp Contest between them; when, after divers confiderations and debates, wherein they appeared to be jealous of each other, it was concluded, to end the debate, that the Place should be demolished, which with fire and blowing up was accordingly done, and all the Walls levelled with the Ground; at what time Lewents, a Place not tenable, being much consternated upon the nearness of so formidable an Army, was both by its Inhabitants and the Imperial Garifon abandoned, and thereupon possessed by the Enemy; and Count Caprara finding himself far inferiour in strength and number, raised his Camp near Atfol, and retired towards St. Croix, to joyn the Hungarian Palatine, who had drawn a confiderable Body into the Field, and incamped near Torney. About which time advice came from the Count Caprara : that in confideration Warradine and Rabb two of the strongest Pieces in Hungary might be surrendered, the Grand Seignior would renew the League for the space of twenty Years, but this being look'd upon only as an Artifice to gain time, and that if the Turks possessed those important Places all the rest would be easily gotten, there was nothing farther negotiated as to that affair.

Winter growing on, the Turks and Hungarian Rebels having seized themselvs of the Fortresses of Atfol, Neusol, Schminitz and Cremnitz, by a Command from the Vizier of Buda, abandoned them, as either not thinking them tenable, or that the charge in maintaining them would be greater then the advantage; yet e're they lest them, they blew up the Works, broke down the Walls, and dismantled most of the Houses, carrying away divers Persons Prisoners to Buda, Grand Novagrade and other Garrisons adjacent.

This being in general the State of Affairs, and of this War, Anno 1680, 1681 and 1682, I shall for the time enfuing take a more exact Survey of particular Transactions. The

The Emperour, finding by this time that there was no Faith amongst the Infidels, and little or none to be given to the fair pretences of his Rebels, who still pretended they took up Arms for the preserving and maintaining their Religion and Liberties, which the Turk h Sultan affured them by his Baffas, should be both enjoy'd, if his and their Arms prevailed, and finding his own Forces too weak to oppole fo great a Torrent as was flowing from all Parts of the Turkish Empire, against the Spring, he negotiated by his Ministers an offensive and defensive League with the King of Poland; which upon the first motion, found great oppofition by the perverie Party, affembled in the Dier, who are ever desirous to keep peace with the Turks, by reason their Hereditary Estates lye on the Frontiers, and are subject to be spoyl'd by the Turks Garrisons: but upon the arrival of Count Waltain, his Imperial Majesties Ambassador in that great Affair; they feemed more pliable, and gave order for the Ambassador's reception in the most splendid manner, passing a Decree that 20000 Men should be instantly raifcd.

ed, for the defence of the Kingdom; and that although the Diet should break up abruptly by reason of the Protestation of any of the Deputies, (which often happens, for if any of them protest against the proceedings, the Diet is dissolved, unless his Assent can within 24 hours be procured,) the said Decree should stand good.

The Negotiation in the Polish Court going on successfully, Count Teckely fell to his former Artifices, feigning himself desirous of nothing more than to come to a Peace with the Emperour, signifying by his Secretary to the Imperial Ministers, that it had for some time past been his chiefest care and business to prolong the Truce, and perswade the Turks to a Compliance, and that in order thereto, he had written to the Grand Signior, insomuch that he hoped an Honourable Peace roight be on the part of the Emperour obtain'd.

These overtures made many hope that himself would at least come in and accept the offered Grace, Pardon, and Favour of his Imperial Majesty, but such hopes soon after vanished, for Teckely perceiv-ing that a League would be concluded between the Emperour and King of Poland, having daily notice of the Advances towards it from such of his Faction as refided at the Polonian Court, he caused the Estates of Hungary, as many as were under the Jurisdiction of his Arms, to assemble at Cascham, where they, to the number of fix, met; and the end for which they were affembled openly declared, which was in these or the like Words delivered by the Adjutant or Speaker; viz. Forasmuch as the said Count had, to the hazard of his Life and Fortune, adventured in all Dangers to maintain the War for the Protection and Preservation of their Religion and Liberties, and was ready at all times to spend his Life on that occasion, it therefore behoved them in Gratitude to confider his Services past, and have in mind the prospect of what he might farther advantage them in, and that it was no time now to look back, feeing they had all fo highly incurred the Emperour's Displeafure; or if they should, then they would break their Words with the Grand Seignior, whose powerful Army would suddenly dealy be upon them, and that without a Head they could not subfift without Faction and Division amongst themselves: therefore if they made choice of one. they could not better do than to chuse the Count, a Man, as he faid, not only of approved Valour and Conduct, but a Man approved of by the Grand Seignior, and beloved by the neighbouring Bassa's; infomuch that they need not fear the Emperour's Indignation, for that they fhould always have a power at hand able to repell his Forces; and as for their Liberties, Religion, and an easie Tribute, they might affure themselves; the Grand Seignior, having folemnly yowed not to alter any thing in the former two, nor suppress or be exacting in the latter, defigning no more than a bare Acknowledgment of his Sovereignty for the two first Years.

This Oration ended, many were furprized, as not expecting any such matter, though divers of his Faction highly approved it; saying, he ought and should be their Prince, and by Threats and Clamors carried it, using divers Ceremonies to confirm him therein, and soon after,

he

he was faluted as such by the Bassa's, who sent to congratulate him: when proud of his unjust Title, he sent out Parties into divers part of the Kingdom to spoil and plunder such as were not consenting to his Promotion, or result to acknowledge him in that capacity.

By this time the Emperour had concluded an Offensive and Defensive League with his Electoral Highness of Bavaria, by which the latter was to raise 10000 Men for the Service of the Empire, the Charges after they are raised to be defrayed by the Emperour; and his Electoral Highness at his own Charge to maintain 3000 more in the Emperour's Service against the Turk in Hungary.

Whilst Teckely and the Turks domineer'd in Hungary, an Express arrived at Vienna, sent by the Count Caprara, the Emperours Ambassador, then residing at Adrianople, to aquaint his Majesty that he had held a Conference with the Aga of the Janizaries, the said Aga had demanded of him, whether the Emperour his Master did accept of the Proposals, that some time since had been made by the Grand Seignior, viz. That his Imperial perial Majesty should yield to the Grand Seignior the Fortresses of Commora and Rabb, with the Islands of Schuts, Rabam, and Setin, and that in confideration thereof, the Grand Seignior would renew the Peace with his Imperial Majesty, and that He the faid Count Caprara had returned for answer, that he had not received any Instructions from his Imperial Majesty relating to these Proposals, much less, Orders to agree to them. To which the proud Aga replied, That seeing these things could not be obtained by Treaty, nor they grant the Grand Seignior's Demands, he would proceed to obtain them by Fire and Sword; and thereupon ordering the Count to return to his Lodging, he went directly to the Grand Vizier, and inform'd him what answer he had received to his Proposals, faying, that there were no hopes of obtaining their defires by Treaty. This advice being transmitted by the Vizier to the Grand Seignior, he in a great rage commanded the same afternoon the Horse tail to be hung out upon a Pole, which is an infallible token that the Grand Seignior or the Grand Vizier intend to take the Field,

Field, and, as it were, a tacit denunciation of War, being a memorandum of the Turks rudenels in their original. He likewife dispatched away Orders to the Tartarian Kam, commanding him thereby to draw together his dispersed Forces, and with all the celerity imaginable march towards Hungaria, there to meet him upon his arrival. The like Orders he caufed to be dispatched to the Vavods, or Princes of Valachia, Moldavia, and Tran-Sylvania, enjoyning also Count Teckely to be ready early in the Spring, with the greatest Power he could draw together; appointing the Aga of the Janizaries to march with the Avaunt guard of the Army, on the 28th of March, himself intending with the Gross of his Army, by this time affembled out of Asia, Anatohia, Egypt the greater and leffer, out of Peloponnesus, Bosna, Bulgaria, Servia, Epirus, and other Countries under his subjection, to the number of 180000 Horse and Foot; and for his reception gave order for creeting a stately House at Belgrade. And the better to expose himself in his proper Colours, and appear a Turk, he caused this denuntiation of War, boasting ing and Bialphemous: A Copy of which I shall give you verbatim, as it is credibly related to be faithfully translated out of High Dutch, and intitled,

A Declaration, or Denunciation of WAR;

Which Sultan Mahomet the 4th, prefent Emperour of the Turks, fent to the Emperour of Germany, dated March 25, 1683. from Adrianople, just as the Baron Saphonara, his Imperial Majestie's Minister, had his last Audience of the Prince Vizier, wherein the said Minister could not comply with the unreasonable Demands of the Turk; which caused the Grand Seignfor to transmit the same to his Imperial Majesty.

The Denunciation, &c.

Ahomer the 4th. Son of Emperours, and of the Famous and Renowned God, Emperour of the Turks, King of Greece, Macedonia, Moldavia, Samaria, and Hegha, King of the B 2 great great and leffer Egypt, King of all the Inhabitants of the Earth, and Prince of the Earthly Paradice, acknowledged Prince, and Son of Mahomet, Preserver of the Cities of Hungaria, Possessor of the Sepulchre of your God, Lord of all the Emperours of the World, from the rifing of the Sun to the going down thereof, King of all Kings, Lord of the Tree of Life, Conquerour of the Melonian Hegeley and the City of Prolenix, great Persecutor of the Christians, and all wicked People, Joy of the flourishing World, Commander and Guardian of your crucified God, Lord of the multitude of Heathens:

We command you to greet the Emperour Leopold, in case he desire it, and you are a Friend to our Majesty, whose Power we will extend very far: You have for some time past acted to our prejudice, and violated Our Friendship, though We have not offended you by War or otherwise; You have taken Counsel and Advice with other Kings and

and Princes how to shake off your yoak, in which you have proceeded very indifcreetly, and thereby have exposed your People to fear and danger, who have nothing now to expect but Death, which you have brought upon your selves; for I declare I will make my felt your Master, and pursue you from East to West, and extend my Majesty to the End of the World. In the procedure of all which, you shall find my Fower exerted to your extreme Prejudice, and shall feel the dreadful Effects of my wrath. And since you have tut your hopes and trust in the strength of some Towns and Castles, I have given command to overthrow them, and trample under my Horses Feet all that is delightful in your Eyes, leaving you no room hereafter to make Friendship with me, nor suffer you to keep any fortified Place wherein to put your trust, for I have resolved forthwith to destroy you and all your People, and to despoil you of the German Empire, after my Will and Pleasure, leaving in the Empire a fid remembrance of my dreadful Sword; that it may publickly appear that I have established my Religion therein, and pursued your crucified God, whose wrath I fear not, nor his coming. hands; but will condemn your Sacred Priests to the Plow, and suffer the Breasts of your Wives and Matrons to be sucked by Dogs and other Beasts. You will do well to forfake your Religion, or I will give order to consume you with Fire. This is enough to let you understand my Will, if you will be so wife as to know it.

This vain-glorious and blasphemous belching against Heaven and Earth, did not at all terrifie his Imperial Majesty, as tohis own particular, being a Prince of undaunted Courage, and unfhaken Refolution, yet grieved, as indeed all Christians ought, and highly concerned to hear the Worlds Redeemer, in whose hands are all the corners of the Earth, who holds the Winds in the hollow of his Hands, and restrains the deep as with a Bridle, in whole Power is all the Breath of Life, and who can with a word dissolve all things into Chaos, reviled and blafphemed by this River Leviathan, this peice of dust and ashes, but man at most, and subject to all Infirmities; but when the Almighty defigns to punish his people, ple, it has been frequently observed that he raises up such like Instruments, yet when he has scourged them sufficiently casts the rod into the fire, as in this case may be expected, and is by Prophecies both facred and moral foretold.

His Imperial Majesty following the precedent of Hezekia King of Juda when Rableka in the like manner with blafphemies upbraided him with the want of Power in the God whom he ferved to deliver him out of the hands of his mafter the King of Affiria, he first committed his cause to God, and relied upon him for protection, cauting publick Prayers and Fasting to be observed, and then communicated the matter to the Electoral Princes at Ratisbone, requiring them not to be wanting in their duty, to defend the Empire; and above the rest pressed his Electoral Highness of Brandenburg, as the best able, to send a considerable force into the field, fending to the Vice-roy of Crotia and Palarine of Hungary to draw together what forces they could; from whom he received an anfwer, that the Estates and Gentry of either Countrey would raise so great a Sum BA

Summ of money as should maintain 10000 in his Imperial service, with which the Emperor seemed highly pleafed; and having notice that Count Teckely began to draw his Troops out of their Winter quarters, he dispatched three new raised Regiments of soot and one of Horse to joyn with his forces in Hungary, resolving to carry on the War on that fide with all imaginable vigour.

About this time notice was given that the Turks were building 50 Boats and small Vessels near Buda, and an 100 at Belgrade and Fffeck to bridge over the Danube, and transport Provision and Ammunition as occasion should require, and the Seignior Hoffinen who was fent by his Imperial Majesty to treat with Count Teckly about a Cessation in order to a Peace, returned without being able to effeet any thing, declaring that the faid Count, upon an order received from the Grand Seignior, had not only broken off the Treaty, but was with all diligence raifing what forces he could to profecute the War, fo that all hopes of accommodation vanished, he expecting daily a great power of Turks and Tartars to joyn him;

him; to prevent which, Orders were given to break down the great Bridges over the Danube, and in their stead to bridge ir with boats.

Notwithstanding the preparations of Teckely to take the field, yet the better to excuse himself of his acting against the Emperor after to many Concessions and so much Grace offered, he, before the breaking up of the Diet at Caschaw made this Oration, viz. That what he had done was for themaintaining of their Liberties and Religions, and that he had undergone many dangers which he could not have borne out against sopotent a Prince had he not been affifted by the Ottaman forces, yet with the knowledge and approbation of the Vizier of Buda he had fome time past made a Cessation with the Emperor, and ever fince used his utmost endeavours to continue a Peace between him and the Grand Seignior. And that therein the Grand Seignior on his part had accepted his mediation, and that for compleating it he intended nothing more than to fend Deputies to treat with fuch as his Imperial Majesty should appoint, as also to the Port to dispole the Grand.

Grand Seignior to a more ready compliance, but that the Protestants ought to be restored to the Churches they have been dispossessed of, and the Estates must think of a way to raile 40000 Crowns, which according to a late treaty with the Grand Seignior are to be paid him annually by way of tribute; and to make provision for the Troops he should be obliged to keep on foot, for the fervice of that Kingdom and do homage to himfelf as Prince of the upper Hungary, and for such as refused to submit thereto, it was best for them for their own Safety to retire out of the Countrey. Upon which most of the Nobility acknowledged him as Prince of upper Hungary; and to make himself the more absolute, he caused mony with his Effiges and Inscription to be coined, and pass as current throughout that Territory, to which he lays claim, by the approbation and confirmation of the Bassa of Offen.

Upon his acknowledgment Teckely sent his Ambassador to the Port, as he had before determined, and to accompany him the Estates chose for their Deputy the Seiur Szirmai, who had in his instructions given him by the Estates, these words, we That the Kingdom of Hungary, which had been reduced to a low and miserable Estate, was now, by the Blessing of God upon the Indestatigable endeavours of Count Teckely and by the favour and protection of the Port, happily reestablished; and withall commanded him to make a due acknowledgment thereof to the Grand Seignior and his Ministers.

ai-

These proceedings greatly holding all men in suspence, the Swifs Cantons sent to the Emperor to offer him two thoufand men at their own charge, and upon his request gave him leave to levy forces at his own charge within their Territories, whilst frequent councils were held at Vienna, where the Emperor for the most part was present, for the management of the Summers War, all hopes of Ceffation or Accomodation being laid afide; for by this time the Turks began to be abroad in confiderable Bodies, a Party of which made a descent upon the Isle of Schuts, where they burnt a Village, killed about 30 persons, and carryed into miserable. captivity about 100 more.

The Turk resolved upon the war, yet fearing fearing the Emperour's conjunction with Poland, used many indeavours to avert the Diet of that Kingdom from confenting thereto; and finding fair means would not work upon them, he fent a Chians, who on the 26 of March 1683, demanded passage through that Kingdom for 50000 Tartars, who, as he faid, were on their march to attend the Grand Seignior upon his arrival in Hungary, threatning them both if they refuse or enter into Alliance with his Imperial Majesty, though the Diet gave small regard to what he delivered, resolving to proseed in complying with the demands of the Emperor, and to conclude the treaty with Count Walltin the Imperial Ambaffador.

Affairs thus standing, a misunder-standing happened between Count Teckety and the Bassa of Buda, the latter institing to have a Gate of Caschaw delivered to such Jamzaries as he should send thither, as likewise to have the Governour of Villeck, whom the Count held prisoner since the taking of that place; both which Teckely resused: but in the end the difference was concluded, which

which else might have redounded to the advantage of the Imperialists.

The long expected Alliance with the Crown of Poland being fully agreed and concluded, the League offensive and detensive was signed on the first of April 1683 by Count Walftin his Imperial Majesties Ambassador on the one part, and by the Committioners of the Kingdom of Poland on the other; by which treaty the Emperor obliges himself to act with an Army of 60000 Horse and Foot against the Turks, and the King of Poland is thereby obliged to have 40000 men in the field to affift the Emperor in the War, of which the Diet have approved, notwithstanding the Threats of the Chians, that the Tartars with a Body of 70000 men will fall into that Kingdom, and use there all manner of Ho-Ailities.

The further particulars of this treaty are these, besides the forces aforesaid, either Potentare is obliged to have in the sield, the Emperor is to pay the Polonian King in present Money Twelve Thousand Florrins, and that his Imperial Majesty and the Queen Dowager of Poland, do relinquish all pretensions of right they have or might have to the Grown of Poland, and that neither the Emperor nor King of Poland do enter into a treaty or conclude a Peace with the Grand Seignior without each others Approbation and Consent.

The time for Action drawing nigh, a great Council of war was held at Vienna on the 9th of April 1683, in order to take such measures as might be advantageous to the Empire in this Summers Campaign; upon whose sitting, the Margrave of Baden, whom the Emperor had fent to take a view of Commora, Raab, the life of Schuts, and other places of importance, arrived and made his report, declaring in what condition the fortifications were, and in how good a posture of defence; after which the Council proceeded to appoint the place of Rendezvous for the Army to be at Presburg, and to approve of the Emperors choice in nominating the Duke of Lorrain Commander in chief of his Army, to be imployed against the Turks, and resolved that it was convenient and altogether necesfary that a Body of men should be kept in pay pay in Crotia, under the command of the Viceroy, the better to secure those Countries, from the incursion of the Turks and Tartars, who were rallying on that fide to burn and plunder. They further concluded, that it was convenient that General Schuts should immediatly march with 7000 men to joyn with the Prince Lubomirski, who was advanced with 6000 Polish Horse for the service of the Emperor, and that the Hungarian Troops confisting of a body of 25000 Horse and Foot Joyning with them, should Act upon the Waag, to prevent the Turks and Rebels from joyning, and to hinder any Incursion that otherwise might be made. That another body of 6000 men should incamp on the Waag near Leopolitat, and in case they perceive the Turks to have a design upon that place, to put themselves into it: and besides this, it was further ordered, that ten or twelve thousand men should be posted upon the Frontiers of Morovia and Silefia to fecure those Countries against the incursion of the Turks.

The Spring being now far advanced, Count Teckely impatient of longer lying ftill, having drawn his Troops under the Walls of Cascham, dispatcht a Messenger to the Bassa of Buda for a supply of 5000 horse, that so he might invade the Country of Silecia; with which number he was supplied, and at the same time he sent his Mandates to the Nobility of the upper Hungary, to attend him in Armes as their Prince; but most of them fent their excuses, defiring him not to involve them in such Danger and Hazard, but rather accept a Sum of Money in Lieu of their service, the which, of some he accepted, but of others refused, faying, they fecretly envied his Advantage, and held correspondency with the Imperialifis, therefore he thought it not good to trust them out of his fight, threatning them with Military Execution if they did not instantly repair to his Standard.

The King of Poland being hastened by the Imperial Minister residing at his Court, upon the conclusion of the Ofsensive and Defensive League, used such diligence in raising men for the Service of the War, and summoning the Ban and Arrear-ban of that Kingdom to attend tend him on the 20th of May, he mustered an Army of 35000 men near Leopol, with a defign immediately to invade Caminice, a strong Place taken from the Turks, who about two Years fince furprized it, but at this time was diverted, upon notice that the Fore-runners of the Turks Army were arrived at Belgrade, and that the Grand Vizier was but four days march behind, with a Body of 60000 Men, and that 25000 Tartars had passed the Neister; yet he sent to Count Teckely to acquaint him that he had made an Offensive and Defensive League with the Emperor, and to let him know, that unless he immediatly made his Peace with his Imperial Majesty, he should be obliged to treat him as his Enemy, to which the Count returned Answer, that he had used his endeavour at the Port for an Accommodation, but found the Grand Seignior altogether averse thereto; and that without his Consent he could not, neither would, enter upon any further Treaty, or conclude a Peace, he having plighted his Faith to the contrary: therefore if his Majesty of Poland did invade his Territories, he would do his

his utmost to defend them, and oppose the Invader with all his Power; and thereupon gave Order for the passing fix thousand Horse and Foot over the Danube, to joyn a Body of Turks that wer ecoming down, who in Conjunction are to have an Eye upon that part of the upper Hungary, bordering on the Territories of the King of Poland, and fent out divers Convoys to fetch in Corn and other Provision into his Camp, resolving to expect the coming of the Grand Vizier, whilst in the mean time the Palatine of Hungary and Vice-roy of Crotia, were drawing the Forces of those Countries into a Body to joyn the Imperialifts, who daily repaired to the place of Rendez VOUZ.

These things passing, the Treaty between the Emperour and the Elector of Brandenburg, was pressed by the Imperial Minister residing at that Court, with all earnestness, to which his Electoral Highness appeared no way averse, but desired time to consider what Methods he should take in order to his raising and maintaining such Forces as was on the part of the Emperour required, to which gave all men hopes of what after enfued, viz. That an offensive and defensive League would be the consequence of that Treaty.

The 6th of May being come, his Imperial Majesty, accompanied with the Duke of Lorrain, the Elector of Bavaria, and other Princes of the Empire, came to Presburg, to take a view of the Army, and to see them drawn up into Battalia, and exercise in warlike Discipline: the List of which Forces, as it was published, running thus.

According to the List taken by the Command of the Duke of Lorrain, the Emperour has in Pay twenty seven Regiments of Foot, making together 55700 Men whereof 25296 were at the general Rendezvouse near Presburg, 4692 in the upper Hungary, 2040 in Jabulunea on the Frontier of Hungary, 2040 at Leoposstade on the Wang, 364 in Austria, 2040 at Vienna, 13912 in the Empire, and 2040 in Bohemia. In the Emperour's Pay is likewise seventeen Regiments of Horse, amounting to 13600 Men, seven Regiments of Dragoons, consisting of 5600 Men.

Men, and four Regiments of Croats confisting of 3200 Men, whereof 15200 are at the General Rendezvouz, 800 in the upper Hungary, 400 in Jabulunea, 2400 at Leopalstadt, 800 in Austria, and 2800 in the Empire: So that the general List of Horse and Foot appears to be thus, at the general Rendezvouz 39696, in the Empire 16712, in the upper Hungary 7532, &c. in all making 78540 Men, Horse and Foot, not accounting the Troops under the Command of the Palatine of Hungary, nor those commanded by the Vice-Roy of Crotia, nor the 600 Polish horse brought into the service of the Emperour by the Prince Lubomirski, over the Army in Hungary, or to Act there against the Turks, Tartars, and Rebells.

The Emperour appointed the Duke of Lorrain Generalissimo, impowering him to Act as he saw occasion, for the advantage of the Empire, without expecting any orders from Court, upless upon special occasion, declaring his resolution to carry on the War with all imaginable vigour, hoping the Princes of the Empire and other Christian Princes, would would freely imbarque themselves in the Action, seeing it not only concerned the Empire, but indeed all Christendom; For that the Grand Seignior aided not his Rebels for pity sake, as he gave out, but took hold of the opportunity to incroach upon the Christian Princes, and if possible, to over-run all Christendom; which he hoped God would never permit to fall into the hands of so cruel and upmerciful an Insidel.

This discourse ended, the Emperour admonished such chief Commanders as were present to play the men, saying, that he would be always ready to reward the Valiant, and with the same Willingness punish the Coward. After which he rode about the Camp to take a view of the Order of his Men, and confessed himself highly satisfied in their Promptness and Aptness to handle their Arms and manage them at all Points; and then having taken leave of the Duke, he returned to Vienna.

About the latter end of April, the Grand Seignior set forth from Adrianople, in order to his being present at the Randezvouz to be holden for the Summers

Cam-

Campaign near Belgrade; the manner of his setting forward and Attendance being thus:

First, his Tents or rich Pavillions were carried to the Place, where, the infuing Night, he defigned to lodge, then went the Carriages with other Tents, for the Commanders and Souldiers; for note, that the Turks have always double Tents, or twice to many as is needful. to lodge in, the Reason being this; when the Tents are pitched in which they intend to incamp, the other Tents: are carried and pitched a days Journey before; so that when they rise again, they, upon their Arrival at the place. where they are to lodge, find their Tents ready, which is one great help to them in their swift Marches; but in case they are in an Enemies Country, and march but flowly, this Order is not observed.

The first Day, the Army confisting of 180000 Men marched twenty five Turks miles, and at Night pitching their Tents, seemed rather a City than a Field Provision; for about the Tents of the Grand Seignior were those of the Basfas and great Commanders; next them, more outward, those of leffer rank, and lo by degrees, according to their Quality or Merit in Arms. As for the Order of the Grand Seignior's March, it was thus; Before the Body of the Army went the Ycomen, a kind of Foot-men, much in the nature of Pioniers, who cleared the way, and levelled the ground for the better and more convenient Passage of the Carriages, setting up heaps of Stones and other figns as marks, and fetting Fire to divers Piles of Wood at the beginning of the March; for observe, the Turks always (unless something extraordinary prevent it) begin their March at Midnight, and so continue to march till the Noon of the enfuing Day. Between two Baffas of his Council rode the Grand Seignior, with a fhort Turlipant, his Turbant set with Diamonds, and his Tunick or Vest studded o're with Rubies, Emeralds, and Saphires, his Horfes Bridle of Gold, and in his Fore-head a blazing Carbuncle, his Bridle-bit Gold, and Scirrops of the same Mettal: before him marched the Janizaries, as likewise on either fide, the foremost being on Horle-

Horseback, bearing lighted Torches, and the rest on Foot armed with Harquibusses and Pole-axes with very short Handles; but between them and the Grand Seignior marched divers Captains, with Horsemens Maces to keep the Vulgar from gazing on the Emperour; and nearer to his Person marched a thousand of his Guards, called the Ich Oglians, or young Gentlemen brought up in the Seragho, till such time they are fit for Service, being before-hand instructed in all manner of Feats of War, as shooting the Harquibuss, casting Darts, using the Long-bow, toffing the Launce or Pike, using the Mace, and the like; and immediately after him, within this Circle, marched divers of the Officers of the Seraglio, being for the most part Eunuchs, and in the midst of them a Chariot or close Litter, in which were the Women for the Grand Seignior's Use; and in each Wing of the Army, or Points of the Crescent, were divers other Chariots or Litters filled with Women, appertaining to the Bassas, or great Captains, not exceeding twenty; for the most part their Wives, tho formerly no fuch thing was permitted. These were inclosed with the divers Orders, as the Tamarii, which are Men on horseback, bearing Lances and Scemyters, who are at all times bound to serve in the Wars in lieu of certain Lands they hold of the Grand Seigmior throughout his dominion. The Accanzi, another fort of Horsemen, who are kept in continual Pay, and are reckoned, for horse, the chiefest strength of the Turkish Empire, as the Fanizaries, who are composed of Christian tributary Children, are accounted its strength for Foot; and the Affapi, who are of finall account, being the Refuse of the Empire, who serve only for Plunder, Marching on Foot, and are, for the most part, in Battels, thrust forward as the forlorn hope, on no other account than to blunt the Enemies Swords; or in Seiges, driven upon the mouth of the murthering Cannons, to no other end than to fill up the Trenches and Ditches with their dead bodies, that so the Imperious Janizaries may mount the eafier on the Ramparts, or Walls of the

the Place belieged: and these, for the most part, are the Sons of Turks. After these marched the Camels, Mules, Dromedaries, and Sumpters, with all manner of provisions; as likewife, Taylors, Bakers, Butchers, Sutlers, and indeed, all men of Trades that can possibly depend upon an Army, or who by labour, or procuring Provision can be any ways serviceable: so that where ever the Tents are pitched all Trades pitch round about them; In fo much that the Camp feems rather like a Mart or Fair than an armed Hoft, with Banners. All the way they marched in the posture aforesaid, they kept deep silence, even to admiration, not offering to break Ranks, or, as little as possible, to indamage the Orchards, Fields, or Gardens, as they passed: and when they came to pitch as aforesaid, all of them, with a loud yell or finging tone, cryed, Allali, Allah, Allahu, which is thrice repeating, O God, &c.

Thus the Army continued in its march till it came to the General

Ren-

Rendelyouz, therefore the particulars of each days march I shall wave for brevities take, and again by following the Turkish Army, return into Hungary, where great preparations, on all fides, were made for a vigorous profecution of the War. The Tartars barbarous Troops beginning to ravage the Country near Caminice, Plundring, Burning, and taking Captive all that came in their way, driving before them the wretched people naked, and bound together with Cords in great droves: to oppole whom the Polonian King drew down fifteen thousand Horse and Foot, sending to the Cossacks to take the Field, and joyn him, promising them large Pay, and at the same time strictly commanding his Subjects not to have any intercourse with the Hungarian Rebells upon fevere Penalties; and withall fent an Envoy to Count Teckely to move him with many pregnant reafons and perswasive Arguments to a complyance and a submission to the proposals of his Imperial Majesty: but the faid Envoy prevailed not with his perverse nature, but as it were rendred him him more haughty and obstinate, by supposing his Cessation would be purchased at any rate; since Emperours and Kings, as it were, became so desirous of his Friendship.

Things being brought to this pass, his Imperial Majesty continued to chear his Commanders and Souldiers with his Presence, and to give Orders for their taking the Field; whereupon he, accompanied with the Arch Dutchess, and Elector of Bavaria, took another view of the Camp. lying neat the Walls of Presburg, and was received with all Joy imaginable: the Army against his coming being drawn up into Batalia in two lines, at least an Hungarian Mile in length, and eighty poices of Cannon, Demy Cannon, and Culvering placed at the Head of it, whereas about eleven of the Clock the Bishop of Strigonia fung Mass in a Tent for that purpose prepared, in which for the Emperour and Empress was a feat set, Canopied over with Cloath of Gold, another for the Arch Dutchels, and a third for the Elector of Bavaria and Duke of Lorain: the

the Mass ended, the Bishop came from under the Tent, and bleffed the Army, whenas the Emperour mounting on Horse-back, and being followed by the Empress, Arch-Dutchess, Elector of Bavaria, and divers others of the Nobility, he visited the Ranks, still encouraging, with his Prefence. and Speeches, the Souldiers and Commanders, to do their utmost against the common Enemy, and then returned to a flately Tent, prepared by the Duke of Lorrain, in which the Emperour, Empress, Arch-Duchess, Elector of Bavaria, Duke of Saxe Lawenburg, and Prince Louis of Baden, were splendidly entertained at Dinner: divers other Tables in Tents, spread for that purpole, being furnished for the other Nobility attending them; and in the mean time the whole tire of Artillery was thrice discharged, and the whole Army, to which his Imperial Majesty, for the better encouragement of the Officers and Souldiers, gave a Months Pay, upon free gift, gave three Salvo's of small shot, and so his Imperial rial Majesty, with the rest of the Court, returned to Presburg, and from thence to Vienna, having given what necessary Orders he conceived convenient; and amongst other things, that twelve half Cannon and eight great Mortarpieces should be taken out of the Arsenal, and sent to the Army, which had received a Command to march and oppose the Proceedings of Teckely, who by this time was very active on this side the Waag: the Imperial Army upon muster was sound to amount to 47000 men.

Upon the remove of the Army, News came that a Croatian Souldier, having infinuated himself into great credit and confidence with the Turkish Governour of Ziget, had watched his opportunity to fire the Magazine of the Garrison, which was capable of maintaining 30000 men for the space of two Years, and that being made Storehouse-keeper, in one part of the said Magazine he had set fire to it by a train, and blown up all, making his escape into Croatia whilst the consterna-

tion lasted; and that by the fall of Timber, and blow of Powder, not only most of the Houses were demolished, but

Five Hundred Turks killed.

The Turks by this time having drawn a Body of twenty five thouland men under the Walls of New-Husel, Major General Schutz, with a strong Party of Imperials, Hungarians, and Bohemians, was lent out to observe their motion: who, upon notice from the Countrey People thereabout, that a Party of Turkish forragers belonging to the faid Garrison, were abroad, and had done great Milchief by burning Houses, driving away Cattel, and taking Prisoners, and that they were upon their return with a confiderable Booty, he taking Guides, marched cross the Countrey with a thousand Foot and five hundred Horse, found them encamped upon a great Plain near Tranchin, who little suspecting any of the Imperial Troops had paffed the Waag, lay carelesty dispersed; infomuch that being furiously encountred, though they could not be CA less less in number than two thousand five hundred, vet they were put to flight and exceeding great flaughter; infomuch that feven hundred fell by the Sword, and two hundred were drowned in the River, divers Prisoners of note taken, and all the Booty recovered, with the loss only of fifty Impérials, twelve Hungarians, and amongst them one Captain, two Enfign-bearers, and a Major of Horse.

The King of Poland perceiving the Tartarian Forces to increase, and upon his Frontiers commit divers Outrages, the better to inforce himself, thought not only fit at his proper Charge to raife two Regiments, one for the Queen, and the other for Prince Alexander, his eldest Son, but delivered out of the Treasury of his hereditary Estate a hundred thousand Crowns, towards the providing a greater Train of Artillery, and defraying the Charges of the War; with part of which he railed eight hundred Huffars armed with Launces, and firistly to guard the Confines of Silefia, on which the Tartar Cham had a Defign fign to make Descent, giving it out that he defigned nothing more than to take the Spoil of that Province.

By this time the Imperial Army was arrived at Ketfer, and riling from thence, marched towards Raab, under the command of the Duke of Larram, as Generalissimus, the Right Wing of Horse commanded by the Duke of Saxe-Lawenburg, and the Left by Count Caprara, Count Staremberg being General of the Foot, and fo Marching along the Banks of the Waag, came and incamped between Raab and Commora, to expect the motion of the Encmy; and there it was that the Duke had the first notice of the Grand Visiers advancing with the grafs of the Ottoman Arroy, as far as Greicks Wiffenberg, and that the Grand Seignior with a greater Power followed by flow Marches, having vowed not to turn his back till he had belieged with his Army the City of Vienna, the principal Imperial Seat of Austria; upon notice of which the Duke of Lorrain again decamped, after he had fent the Count PalPalfie to give the Emperour an account of the State of the War, refolving to be in Action, and thereupon marched towards Gran, a strong Garrison of the Turks in Hungaria, with a design to besiege it; for that purpose having sent for divers other Mortars, Granadoes Bombes, and the like; they were sent up the River in Boats and arrived safely at the Camp.

The Emperour finding the perverleness of the Hungarian Rebels, sent an express to the Palatine of that Kingdom, immediately to march with the Forces under his Command, not amounting to above five thousand. with which he had been posted in the Isle of Schuts, to joyn Major General Sobuts and the Prince Lubomirsk, on the Waag, and there to act against Count Teckely, and such Forces as he had in the Field; who at that time belieged the Castle of Donowitz, but before they could draw together strong enough to raise the Siege, the faid Castle was, after five weeks Siege, taken.

ken, and the Baron Joannel, Governour thereof, made Prisoner; yet Teckely began to grow jealous of the Turks; who now having, by his Rebellion, made way for their Arms, did not regard him as before; therefore, although the Bussa of Offen sent divers Summons to command him to joyn his Forces with the Body of Turks, incamped near new Husel, yet he declined it, making divers excuses and desiring that he might act separate.

That nothing might be wanting in the Emperour to prevent the miferies of War in the lo long distracted Kingdom of Hungary, but that those that had taken up Rebellious Arms against him might easily perceive how willing he was for the saving the essuing he was for the saving the essuing the essuing the hold a General Declaration, promising thereby, as well to the Hungarians, as Germans, who had been or are in Rebellion against him, restitution of Goods and Estates, if they lay down their Arms, and te-turn to their Obedience: upon which feveral Germans and some Hungarians, who had deferted the Emperours Service, and taken part with Rebels, came in and fubinitted, who thereupon were restored in Person, Goods and Estates; which did not a little alarm Count Teckely, by possessing him with a Fear that many of his Followers might do the like; and thereupon to prevent it, he again began a feigned Treaty with the Emperour; and the rather, for that he had notice that the Czar of Muscovy earnestly defired to enter into the Treaty between the Emperour and King of Poland: yet he put a strong Garrison into the Fortrels of Donowitz, which is a Place of great Importance, and capable of puting all the Country under Contribution as far as Cracoro.

The Duke of Lorrain with the Imperial Army being advanced within four Leagues of Gran, incamped there, to expect an Account in what posture the Enemies were; as not thinking it safe to besiege so Important a Place as

Gran,

Gran, without good affurance : and there he received advice, that the Grand Vicer and Aga of the Janizaries were with all diligence forming the Body of their Army near Belgrave, whereupon he ient out two Parties. each confifting of four thousand Men. to observe their motion; he also received advice that the Count Caprara, his Imperial Majesties Ambassador, who fo long negotiated at the Port. was brought to Belgrave, under the charge of the Aga of Janizaries, and strictly guarded, not permitted to go abroad without especial Licence from the Grand Visier, and then not without fifty Janizaries to attend him, to whom he is obliged to pay a daily Stipend.

The Duke of Lorrain having learned the State of the Turkish Army, and fent out a Party who descated eight hundred Turkish Horse that were advanced near his Camp to discover what they could, raised his Camp, and marched directly towards Newholes, not thinking it safe to attempt

Gran,

Gran, in which Garrison there was not computed to be less than eight thoufand Turks; and Hungarians: but refolving to be in action before the Body of the Turkish Army could take the Field, although he had frequent advice that the Grand Visier sent out daily Detachments, and amongst the rest one very considerable, consistingof twenty thousand Men, to joyn the Bassa of Buda; he sat down before New-hulel, the greatest part of whose Suburbs the Garrison had demolished and burnt, as not being Tenable, and retired into the City or upper Town, at what time the Country-People in the Turkish Territories near Commora and Raab, fearing the advance of the Turkish Army, retired with their Substance into those Imperial Garrisons, to prevent the severe Treatments which they are wont to receive from the Turks in times of War, and with all possible diligence the great Ordnance were conveyed to the Camp, whilst a Body of Men was forming at Presburg to recruit cruit the Emperours Army if occasion required it, being composed of Moravians, Bohemians, and Hungarians, and to prevent any Party that might be fent from the Enemies Camp falling upon his Out-guards, he fent a Detachment of four thousand Horse in two Parties to burn the Bridge of Effek; where, upon their Arrival, they found feven hundred Turks advantagiously posted, who at first made great shews to defend the faid Bridge; but upon the first Discharge of four Field-pieces the Imperialists brought with them, the Turks in great Disorder retired, as altogether despairing to defend it, yet not fo swiftly, but being pursued, about a hundred of them were killed, and as many taken Prisoners; when after the Dispute, the Prisoners, to the number of two hundred, who for that purpole brought Saws, Axes, Sleds, and the like, broke the Bridge in pieces, and afterward burnt the greatest part, setting the rest a float down the River.

By this time the Duke having intrenched and raifed his Battery, played furiously upon the Town with eight piece of Canon, carrying thirty fix and forty pound Balls, and was answered in the same Language by the befreged, who made diverte Sallies to hinder the advancement of the Lines and Works, wherein divers were killed on either fide: for in the Town were, amongst others, a thousand 7amizaries, two or three hundred of which were in every Sally that wasmade, for the space of four days, inwhich space fix Sallies were made, though with the greatest disadvantage to the Turks, for the Imperialis keeping in their Trenches, cut divers of the Enemies in pieces as they came to attacque them. Upon notice of this Siege, the Bassa of Offen sent to the Duke to inform him, that the Grand Seignior and Count Teckely were refolved to observe the Truce till it expired; but he returned answer, that they had by divers Hostilities, as well the Turks as the Hungarian Rebells, broke the Truce, and that this offer he could conceive to no other end than to protract tract time till they could draw their Army into the field: therefore he found it absolutely necessary, since they had been the Aggressors, to make the best use of the present Juncture, to employ the Arms of the Empire to the best advantage, and that he could not hearken to the observing a Truce that the Enemy had so manifestly violated, but if he had any thing to offer in that Case, he must apply himself to the Emperour, and the Council of War, affembled to debate the reasonableness of fuch Matters: and with this Anfwer the Messenger being dispatched, he caused two pieces of Cannon, newly arrived in the Camp, carrying Balls of fifty and fixty pound, to be bent against the Gate, looking towards Gran, and battering it with fixteen shot, beat in pieces the Iron Port-cullices and Ribs of Copper, but the belieged had countermured, or rather dammed it up, yet a furious affault was given, but without success; for the Imperialsts were capable of entring, but with fome los obliged to retire, though divers fresh fresh Parties were commanded on a For the Turks from a Sally-Port, undiscerned by the Christians, came down upon them in great numbers, yet they made good their ground with a bloody and doubtful Fight, till the Turks were beaten into the Town, and the Retreat sounded by command to call off the Imperials.

But leaving this Siege a while, I shall return to Count Teckely, who, continuing near Tokay, drew together fuch Forces as he could to oppole the Joynt-Forces under the Leading of. the Prince Lubomirski, the Palatine of Hungary, and Major-General Schutz, who had feized the important Posts on the Waag, and by that means hindered him from joyning with the Turks, at which, as most suppose, he was no whit forry, but rather rejoyced at such an excuse; for had he been embodied with the Turkish Army, his Grandeur, by which he allured the ignorant, and fuch as fought for Prey, to take Arms: against their Emperour, would have been ecclipfed and impaired, especially if they had been commanded by a Turkish Bassa; for such is the Insolency of those men, that although they, for the most part, are in their Original but Slaves or Tribute Children, that when they come to this Preferment they make no Scruple to Lord it over Kings and Princes, though their Lives and Fortunes depend upon the Breath and Pleature of their Master, who frequently, upon the least Capricio, diffeises them both of Life and Honour, fending the meanest of his Slaves for the Heads of his greatest Captains; nor dare any other oppose it upon Forseiture of their own.

This being a good excuse for Teckeby, the better to keep up his Reputation with his Faction, he again pretended to treat with the Emperour about a truce; but this Artifice so oftenused to protract time would not take, he thinking by another stratagem to pacific the Turk, gave out he would joyn with a Body of Tartars, consisting of nine thousand, in order to besiege Zathmor, as knowing that he could

if

could at pleasure Lord it over those rude People who came to Wars only for Prey, and if for be they can ger Booty, they matter not who Commands, or whom they Spoil, be he Friend or Enemy. Having joyned a Party of these barbarous Infidels, more inhumane than the Turks, he passed a Breach of the Danube, & burnt divers Villages, Plundring and taking Prisoners many of the Boors, who had not time to retire, by reason of his suddain and unexpected arrival, many of those miferable people fell, likewife into the hands of the Tartars, who tying them together in cords drove them before them into miserable bondage, conveying them thither (without any harkening to Ransoms proposed by their Friends) by fuch Merchants, as they call them, as the Soldiers fold them to, who for that purpole always attend the Turkish Camp, bring Loads of Cords and Iron shackles to Bind and fecure them, without respect either to Sex or Age, nay the Aged fare worse than those in the strength of their Age; middle middle Age, or extraordinary Young; for they being looked upon as unferviceable, feldom escape the Sword.

To requite the outrage of Teckely and the Tartars, the Vice-roy of Crotia having notice that a Party of the Rebels, Turks and Tartars, to the number of twelve or thirteen thousand, were advancing upon the Frontiers, he by stopping the strait Pals of Jabulunk not only impeded their advancement, but, with a party of a thousand horse, fell into them, and after two hours difpute put them to the rout, killing three hundred upon the place, and taking a hundred Prisoners, thereby redeeming or relcuing divers miserable Christians, whom they dragged after them in Ropes and Chains, having surprised them in their Houses, most of whose Houses they had plundred and laid in Ashes.

The Siege of New-Husel, whilst these things were doing, was carryed on by the Imperialists with all imaginable Vigor, and the Besieged prepared as resolutly to defend it, being incouraged couraged thereto by the approach of the Turks Army, a part of which by this time was lodged upon an Eminence near Gran, and waited for an additional force to fall upon the forces appointed to Guard the River Nitera under the command of the Palatine of Hungary, who undertook, with a felect power of the Militia of that Kingdom, to defend both that and the Waag: yet such was the resolution of the Imperial Leagers that they advanced their trenches within an hundred paces of the Wall, running them under ground, in order to fix a Mine under the chief Bull-work of that Garrison, playing at the same time furiously against the Wall: infomuch that, for the space of two hundred yards, all the Battlements were beaten down; which the Turks in the Counterfcarp perceiving, fallied furiously upon the Pioneers; but being encountered by a Regiment of Austrians commanded on to their affiftance, they were forced to retire with the loss of fixty eight of their companions, and amongst mongst them a Zangiack, two Captains and an Enfign-bearer, when following that success, the Imperiatists pressing on, entred one of their Redoubts, and for a while maintained it, but a great party sallying, and the Cannon of the Town playing incessantly upon them, they were forced to retire with some loss.

Thele things paffing, divers Councels where held at Vienna and Prefburg, in order to the management of the War, the Electoral Princes being daily follicited to fend fuch Troops as they could raife into the Field; for that by frequent Courriers it was advised, that the body of the Turks Army, under the leading of the Grand Vifier. had mustered, and was drawing from Bell-grade in order to beliege some Important place, thereby to raise the Seige of New-hufel: whereupon it was resolved that three new Regiments should be raised, and that four Regiments one of Horse and an other of Foot should be detached from the forces of the Empire, under the command

mand of Count Waldeck, as likwife it was agreed, that the Quota's and Arrears of the Electoral Princes, and all other Princes depending upon the Empire, should be immediately performed, for defraying the Charges, and for the better management of the War, Upon which Resolves, the Marquels of Baden Dourlach presented his Deputy a memorial, setting forth the great damages he had sustained by the Warbetween the Empire and the Crown of France, as well by the last as the precedent: & therefore defired that he might be freed from the Taxes of the Empire, as not being in a capacity to pay them; upon which the Estates assembled in Council, wrote a favourable letter to the Emperour in his behalf, but the affairs of the Empire requiring great Summs of Mony to defray the charges of a wide wasting War, it could not be wholly dispenced with, though part was remitted.

Teckely having taken breath for a long time without being urged to action, alsembled a great party near Zarmar, threatning to beliege it: and to that end fent for Han Kerogly, Commander of the Tartarian Troops in those parts. Whereupon the Duke of Lorrain sent a Regiment of Foot to enter it; who without any opposition effected the command of their General, which put a stop to the intention of the Rebells; yet they out of a bravery coming within fight of the Walls, fire divers pieces of Cannon, and were answered in the same language: The garrison at the same time appearing with Ensigns Spread, Trumpets founding, and Drums beating, feeming thereby resolute to make a vigorous defence, in case they were besieged. Whereupon he passed on to expect the Tartars, who under the leading of Ingreni Kan, Son or Nephew to the Great Tartarian Cham, was upon his march into Hungary by the way of Transilvania; where as well of the Transylvanians their Friends, as those that were their Enemies, they made spoil. Upon notice of which, and to prevent prevent such a conjunction, Major-General Schuts posted himself near Transchin, who there in conjunction with the Prince Lubomirski, made a body of 12000 Horse and Foot, expecting daily a reinforcement from Prefburg; whither the Troops from all parts were drawing, to recruit as occasion required it. The Imperial Army, the gross of whose Body lay incamped at Commora, from whence a confiderable Party was fent out by the Dukes command, under the leading of Collonel Monthazon, to burn the Bridg on the River Grann, over which the Turkish Army was to march, in order to their advancing towards Newbensel: But ere sheir arrival, the Turks had strongly posfeffed it with a detached Party, fent out by the Baffa of Buda, who about a League from thence, was incamped for the fecurity of Gran; into which he had put 2000 Foot and 1000 Horse, 1000 of the former being Janizaries, fo that they could not effect their defign.

During these transactions, the Czar of Moscowy, by his Ambassador, had often conferences with the Ministers of Poland, in order to his entring into the League agreed upon between that Crown and the Emperous against the Tarks, offering divers large overcures; but it not appearing that he had or could this Summer have any confiderable Forces in the Field, it came at this time to no conclusion; though the Treaty continued, and still continues on foot; that Prince being greatly defirous to regain the Towns which the Tartars, fecretly encouraged thereto by the Turks, took from the Moscovian Dukedome, during the intestine broils, and clandestine Revolutions of that Government; in which the Great Duke fell by Poison, and most of the Nobility by the hands of the rude Multitude, who under pretence of revenging their Princes death, committed all manner of outrages, laying Houses wast with Fire, plundering, murthering, ravishing of Women, deflowering Virgins, seizing upon the Goods of Merchants, overthrowing Temples, and all other wickedness; for such was, is, and will be, the miserable condition of those King-D 2 doins, doms or States, where the rude multitude turn Reformers, and pretend to do justice upon offenders. But to return.

By this time, the Electoral Princes being fenfible how much the great Army of the Turks conduced to the encouragement of the Rebels, and that if preparations were not speedily made, the Imperial Army under the command of the Duke of Lorrain, would prove too weak to keep the Field against such a multitude, used great diligence in raifing fresh Troops. Nor were there Voluntiers of divers Nations wanting to flock to the Imperial Camp, as defirous of nothing more than to fight against the common Enemy, who appeared fo formidable to Christendom, so that fix new Regiments were compleated, four of which were commanded to continue at Presburg till they had orders to march further; and the other two kept on their way to the Army, encampedbetween Commora and Newheusel: who in their way encountred 500 Turks, that were advanced as far as Newstadt, when between the fore-runners of the Imperialifts

Imperialists and the faid Turks, there happened a sharp encounter: for the Turks supposing the Imperialists inferior to them in number, by reason the Hills interposed between the advanced, and those that were yet to advance, and loth to lofe the Booty they had gotwhich confifted of much Cattle; they came resolutely to the encounter, firing with their Harquebusses thrice round; when as the Vaunt-guard of the Imperialifts answered them with the like falutes, whose Rear-guard perceiving them ingaged, drew off, and paid fing the Hill, appeared at the back of the Turks drawn up in Battalia, which they no fooner perceived, but despairing to prevail, as also of any succour, they being advanced ten Leagues from their body, they threw down their Arms for the most part, and betook themselves to flight, in which, and upon the place, 200 were killed, and the rest, or, at leastways, the greatest part of them, fell into the hands of the Imperial Parties, fent out from the Camp near Commora, to observe the motion of the Enemy near Gran. The Booty reco-D 3 vered vered was 300 head of Cattle, 67 Slaves and much Houshold-stuff, which they had taken from the Villagers by the way as they had paffed: amongst them was taken prisoner a Nephew to the Baffa of Buda; who upon strict examination confessed, that the Grand Signior's Army confifted of the chiefest strength of Asa and Gracia, and that by the beginning of August they reckoned (accounting the Tartars that were coming to their aid, and those to be sent by the Princes of Transylvania, Moldavia, and Kallachia,) to have in the Field in Hungary 300000 effectual men, with part of which it was refolved to fight the Imperial Army, if it could be drawn to a Battle, whilft another part belieged Raab, Commora, and other Imperial Fortreffes, the Grand Signior not doubting but to make him Mafter of the remaining part of Hungary and Austria, having fivorn by the facred Head (as he termed it) of Mahomet, not to withdraw his Army, till he had possessed himself of Vienna.

This advice, fome supposed too Romantick, only to curry favour for his better better treatment, and that by receiving more liberty than ordinary, he might make his escape: For he moreover added, That he did not greatly favour the Vahumetan Superstition, but was greatly desirous to become a Christian, yet was he sent prisoner to Raab, there to remain till further orders.

The menaces of the Grand Signior, though indeed he had a powerful Army on foot, and every day expected to be in those parts; had not such effects upon the Duke of Lorrain nor the Council of War, that daily affembled in the Camp, as to make them think of withdrawing the Leaguer from before Nemhensel: but the rather induced them to press the fiege with greater resolution and vigor, that so if it were possible to be Masters of that important place, (which to few years fince cost the Turks .30000 Lives to obtain it) before the gross of the Turks Army could pass the River Gran, in order to attempt its relief, or the Tartars joyn with Count Teckely, to fall into Silefia. This important place is scituate in a fair plain, on the further bank of the River Neytra, D 4 encomencompassed with a Mote and deep Trenches, Palizadoes, and divers Flankers; the Battlements of the Walls, being intermixed with small Towers or Bulwarks for playing the Cannon on, or playing with Small-Shot, in case of a Storm, for there they stand secure from the force of the Leaguerers Small-Shot, and advantagiously from all fides annoy them to the Land fide: For the River making a Point or Bend, as it were, incloses two parts. There stands a strong Castle, though not appearing more than twenty Cubits above on the Platform or Battlements, on which are usually planted thirty pieces of great Ordnance.

To encounter this danger, the Imperialists having raised two Batteries, play so furiously, that with their Cannon they dismounted divers Pieces of the Enemies; many of which were broken with the violence of the Shot from another Battery, that from four Mortars threw in about twenty Granadoes in one day; which killed about 100 of the Besieged, and demolished a considerable number of Houses, and amongst amongst other things, beat down the Turret of their chief Mosk or Temple: and that the Garrison was in great consternation, it was reported by a Christian Slave, who made his escape over the Wall, and fled to the Imperialifts: adding. That the Inhabitants having their Houses demolished in great number by the Shot of Cannon, Bombs. and Granadoes; did greatly murmur against the Governour, saying, That the Grand Visier neglected and delayed their relief, and that it was but reafon they should provide for their own. fafeties in time, by capitulating with the Besiegers; who if things came to extremity, if they spared their lives which was doubtful whether they would ! or not, would certainly plunder them, and ftrip them out of all they had: and that this discontent of the common people, the Governour had used great diligence to quiet and calm, by many perfivations, putting them in hopes of the Visiers and Aga of the Janizaries approach with 50000 Foot and 30000 Horfe, and that a greater power would follow from Belgrade, and that upon their paffing 111000

the River Gran, the Visier of Buda would joyn them with 20000 more, who were posted under his command upon an eminence near Gran Town: But some of the most turbulent seeming still disfatisfied, he caused six to be hanged up for a terrour to the rest, and to deter them from mutinying, which upon the Imperialists preffing the Siege they were prone to, and immediately commanded the Captains to prepare for a Sally, and especially those that were lodged on the Counterfcap. Which on the tenth of Tune they did, advancing under shelter of the Night as far as the Bustion-trench; but being furioutly charged by the Imperialiffs, they were beaten into the Town with great loss; in which action the Imperialifts loft 33 men, and amongst them three Officers of note, but the Turks trible the number: for being pushed on by their Commanders, who feldom fpare their men, they fell unawares into a fortified work, where were lodged fix Companies of Croats, who with their broad Swords cut in pieces all that entered.

Whilst this was doing, a Bombe salling in the Town; fired one of their Store-houses, which inraged by the Wind, drove on, consuming as near as could be computed by the continuance of the slame, twenty Houses, giving light also to the Action: For during the conflagration, all the Outworks were enlightened so far, as to see each particular, though this happened between one and two in the Morning.

The Turks beaten into the Town, the better to prevent Supplies of Provision being brought up the River, or any Forces that by Night might enter the Garrison, (for it was more than suspected that the Bassa of Buda had such a design) The Duke of Lorrain commanded the Regiments of Halleweil, Ladrow, Kherr and Castelli to reinforce the Body of Men under the command of the Palatine of Hungary, with which he had posted himself on the other side the Neytra.

The news of the Siege of Newhenfel, and the success of the Imperialits in advancing and carrying it on, being come to the Ears of the Prime Visier, and that the Polonian King was advancing with a strong power, intending to pass the River Office Inblow, Row, or Telfchen, in order to his passing into Hunga-7: He fent a confiderable supply of Mony to the Bassa of Caminietz, to inable him to raise a body of Cossacks, to be commanded in chief by the Cham of Tartary, to observe the motions, and oppose the proceedings of the Poles. These people called Cossacks were once united to the Kingdom of Polonia, and ferved them upon all occasions, chose Captains of their own, and did not acknowledg any King; yet proved exceeding serviceable, especially to prevent the incursions of the Tartars into Lithuania, Podelia, and other Provinces of the Poles, into which they made frequent inroads, as living for the most part upon spoil. When in the Reign of Vldiflayus, they separated themselves, for that the faid King warred upon them, either to bring them under his subjection, or utterly to extirpate them; but his project took not, for choosing them-selves Captains of divers Nations, being indeed a medley of people, they joyn'd joyn'd with their brethren the Moscovite Cossacks, and fought divers dreadful Battles with the Polonians with various fuccess; till at length being wearied. they past the Ister and Boristhenus, and there had Lands affigned them by the Turk and Moscovite, they well knowing those men to be the Shield of Poland. There they continued, having divers conflicts with the Tartars and Poles till the death of Vidiflayus and some years after: When as the Poles perceiving themselves for want of their guard upon the Frontiers, lye open and expofed to the fury of the favage Tartars; who like so many ravenous wild beasts, made frequent inrodes, and with fire and Sword wasted the fruitfullest part of the Countrey, driving away herds of Cattle, and carrying Men, Women and Children into miserable captivity. It was in the Dyet at Leopol agreed, That Deputies should be sent to the Coffacks, to invite them in the name of the Estates of Poland, to return to their antient Habitations: Which some of them did, but others being fettled with their Families refused it; so that at this day they indifferently serve the Turks or Christians in their Wars, living for the most part by the Sword, being always ready to espouse the quarrel of him that will bid most, be it right or wrong.

The Turks Army by this time being upon its march, and the belieged in Newhenfel continuing to make a vigorous defence, continually repairing by Night what the Cannon beat down off the Walls in the Day; and that in the opinion of the Engineers, they could not run their Mines to the Wall, by fuch means to become mafters of the place in less than a Fortnight: A Council was held in the Camp, in order to come to a refult, Whether the fiege. should be raised or continued? On one hand it was urged, That the fuddain raifing the Siege would imply a fear in the Imperialifts, and prove advantagious to the Turks, and heighten their courage, and redound to the dishonour of the Empire; and that in confideration thereof it was rather convenient to hazzard a battle with the advanced part of the Turks Army, that was fent to relieve relieve the Besieged: or give a furious affault to the Town on all parts, in which it might probably fall out, that they should carry it by storm. these Councils were on the other hand not thought convenient at fuch a juncture, it being alledged, That the Army was not yet compleat, and that in unadvitedly hazzarding a Battle. without the conjunction of all the Forces, or at least those the King of Poland was bringing into the Field; was to hazzard at one Cast all the hereditary Countries of the Empire. As for attempting the place by Storm, experience had already made it apparent, that it was a matter of great difficulty, and more men must necessarily be lost. than the place was worth; That it was no policy (if the attempt should provefuccessful, as it was greatly to be questioned whether it would or not) to purchase a Town at the price of so much blood. But something must be resolved before the Ottoman Forces advanced so near as either to oblige the Army to-Battle, or a dishonourable Retreat. The Duke of Lorrain was of the former opiniz on, being defirous of nothing more than to give the Infidels Battle, if it was possible to oblige them thereto. But whilft these debates were undetermined, the Emperor being fenfible of the state of affairs, and not willing to hazzard the strength of his Empire at a Cast, sent an express order from Vienna to the Duke, to quit the fiege, and return to his former Camp near Commora: which he accordingly did. And immediately after his departure, the befieged sallied out, and set their Pioneers on work to fill up the Trenches, and demolish the battery the Imperialists had raised, for fear that they upon second thought, or a new reinforcement, might return to the Siege.

In this enterprize the Imperialists made four attacks upon the Counter-scarps, Half-Moon and Ravelin; in which, and at the seven fallies the Turks made, they lost 500 men: And the Turks are supposed to lose double the number, 100 at once being killed and spoiled in a Bulwark, which was blown up by a Granado, containing fifty pound of Powder.

Whilst Newhenfel was besieged, the Palatine of Hungary taking the advantake of the Turks consternation, drew out a detatchment of 1000 Foot, and 500 Horse, and marching cross the Countrey, laid fiege to the Fortress of Scarone, furnmoning it to furrender; but the Governour refusing, he from a small rising battered it with four Demi-Culverings for the space of fix Hours, in which time he laid open a breach fo wide that fix might march abreaft: which the belieged perceiving, founded a Parly, but could get no other Conditions than to be made Prisoners of War, the whole Garrison not confisting of more than 68 Turks, of which eight were killed with the Cannon-shot, and the remainder carried Prisoners to Novigrade. After which, the Palatine having put 150 men into the place, and furnithed them with all things necessary, returned to his Post; where he had notice, that the Count Palfi had joyned the Imperial Army with 3000 of the new Levies.

Count Teckely being all this while buly in the upper Hungary, to get himself effectually acknowledged Prince of that Province, and finding cold returns of fuch meffages as he fent to divers of the Nobility upon that occasion, and especially of the Governours of the Berg Towns, whom he pressed more than any other: He refolved to compel them by Force to do what by words he could not oblige them to, and thereupon fent a Body of 3000 Hungarians, and 1000 Tartarian Light-Horse-men, in his name, to take possession of those Towns; as likewife to poffes the Silver Mines, not far distant from them. Not so. feeming fatisfied, as well knowing the Turks were at hand to back him, he fent forth his Summons to injoyn the Inhabitants of the Counties of Neutra, Trenchin and Taroz, to supply him with Provision for the subsistence of his Army; threatning upon failure thereof to plunder and burn their Towns; which forc'd divers of the Countrey people, and fuch as lived in places subject to the incursions of the Rebels, to remove with their substance into Towns of ftrength:

ftrength: by reason at the same time, the Governours of the Fortresses had sent an Express, under pain of being treated as enemies to the Empire. So that between both, the wretched people were in great perplexity: but upon certain notice, That the Turks Army consisting of 80000 Horse and Foot were marching with all speed into those parts; a great number of Villages have complyed to Teckely's demands, and amongst other, Papa, Vesprin, and Totis, have put themselves under his protection.

The Duke of Lorrain, upon his quitting the siege of Newhensel, having notice, That the Bassa of Buda had a design to fall into Moravia and Silesia with the body of men under his command, and for that intent was upon his march; he with the Imperial Army Incamped upon the bank of the Danube to hinder his passage, as likewise to secure the conveyance of Provision to the Imperial Garrisons scituate upon the banks of that River, and to prevent any design the Turks might have upon the solution. And at the same time the

the Palatine of Hungary is posted on the Waag near Trenchin, daily expecting the King of Poland, who with his Forces lay at that time incamped near Cracam; as also orders from the Emperor how to proceed in the juncture of affairs, which he received upon the return of the Duke of Saxe Lemenburg, who was fent to Vienna to give his Imperial Majesty an account of the State of affairs; and whilst he lay incamped on the Danube, he caused the Fortifications of Raab to be repaired, putting a reinforcement into it, and furnishing it with all things neceffary to hold a long fiege, and make a resolute defence, in case it should be besieged.

And now great was the expectation of all men; for the Visier with his Army, having passed divers small Rivers, by Plashing of Trees, or bridging them over with Boats, by swift marches advanced as far as Stat Weissemberg, within six hours march of the Imperial Camp; his Forces, Horse and Foot, consisting of 80000 effectual men. And thither he sent for Count Teckely, who immediately went to attend him: When to prevent the Fortifications on the Neytra from falling into the Turks hands, the Emperor fent orders to Count Chackey, who commands on that fide, to demolish them: Which was accordingly performed. And now so near were the approaches of the two Armies, that divers Skirmishes with various success happened between parties. The Turks impatiently expecting 12000 Tartars, who were upon their march through Moldavia, to joyn them. And the Imperialists, as earnestly expected the Prince of Transylvania; (who envying Count Teckley's advancement, and mistrusting the Grand Signior has a design to deprive him of his Principality) promifed, as the rumour went, to take the Field with 18 or 20000 men, at arrival of the Polonian Forces, and to act offensively against the Turks.

vent

On the 2 of July 1683, the Duke of Lorrain having received advice, That a Body of Turks and Tartars had passed the Raab at Segine, and exercised all manner of cruelties upon the people where they came, burning their Houses, deslowing their Daughters, ravishing and

and ripping up their Wives dashing their young Children against the Pavement, and haling fuch as were of ability of body into miferable bondage, with a thousand the like crue ties, and bestialities: He detached confiderable party to oppose their further proceedings, and oblige them to repais the River; which they accordingly did, and after that, having made a shew, as if they intended to lay siege either to Leopolstadt or Raab: The Imperial Horse posted themselves near Altenburg, and the Foot in the Isle of Schutz, to be in a readiness as occasion should serve to affift either of the places. But this stratagem being in a short time discovered, and that the Turks real intentions were to get between the Horse and Foot, to hinder their acting joyntly: The Imperial Horse sent their Baggage towards Altenburg; which the ? urks attacked with 3000 men, but being fought withal, and for a long time couragioufly repulfed by the Convoy, which exceeded not 600 Horse, they retired, leaving 100 of their men dead upon the place: But in their retreat meeting a party of 800 Turks, Turks, they again rallied, Whereupon the Duke of Lorrain from the main Body, made what speed he could with 4000 Light-Horse, insomuch that there happened a sharp and obstinate Skirmith between both parties; in which the Imperialists lost 1200 men, and all their baggage, valued at 40000 Guilders. The Lurks are faid to have lost in this skirmish 1700 men, and amongst them divers of note. The Duke of Lorrain was ingaged in the midst of the Enemies, and near unto him were wounded, the Prince of Savoy, General Rubatta, and the Count d' Lamberg, and the Prince of Aremberg: The Princes of Savoy and Aremberg foon after dying of their wounds. After which the Imperial Horse making good the retreat, passed the Bridge, and joyned the Foot, who during the Action, being divided by the River, could not come to their affiftance.

The Turks heightned by this fuccess, and being recruited by 8000 more of their accomplices, laid siege to Raub, from whose Walls the Guns played upon them so suriously, that they perceive ed that siege too hot for them, they after having burnt an adjacent Village called Petronello, quitted it, and marching outwards joyned the gross body of the Ottoman Army, under the leading of the Grand Visier, who marched directly towards Vienna, the chief City of Au-Aria, and Bulwark of the Empire, spoiling and ravaging the Countrey after fo dreadful a manner, that the Inhabitants fled before them, with fuch things as were portable, like droves of Sheep; and divers Towns to avoid fuch cruel treatment, put themselves under their protection, the Countrey all about them being in a flame. There might one behold the hellish Tartars, like so many fiends, dragging and haling the Christians fast bound in Ropes; and the barbarous Turks carrying the Heads of such as they had flain in triumph, as it were, upon the points of their Lances, still blaspheeming the Redeemer of the World, and threatning destruction to all Christen-Whilst before the torrent, the dom. Imperial Army retired under the Walls of Vienna, into which City to get entrance, the Count Staremburg, Governour thereof.

thereof, was obliged with much bravery to fight his way through the Enemy, with a Body of Foot, with which he had been abroad to observe their motions: and immediately entring, gave orders for firing the Suburbs, and placing the Guns upon the Wall, resolving to make a resolute and brave defence.

Whilst the transaction happened, Maior General Schutz had better success, for upon notice that a strong party of the Rebels were about to pass the Danube about fix Leagues from his Post, he drew off, and marched immediately to impede their passage: And finding them making provision for their transportation, he fell upon them with fuch courage and bravery, that after a hot dispute, he put them to the rout, killing 200 upon the place, taking 106 Prifoners, with feven Enfigns, and a great Booty, which they had gotten in their Progrefs. Their intent was to have fallen into Silesia, there to expect a body of Tartars, who were on their march to joyn them.

The Turks Camp increasing before Vienna, and furioufly preffing the fiege, though the besieged made a brave and resolute desence: Yet knowing they could not subfift without relief from abroad, the Bishop of Aichstadt, the Imperial Commissioner, by a Memorial represents unto the Diet for that purpose affembled, the imminent danger wherein the City was; as likewise the whole Circle of Austria, which must of neceffity fall into the hands of the unmerciful Infidels, if a speedy course were not taken to relieve it; and under what miferies the Countries about the belieged City groaned, they were not ignorant: Therefore in the name of his Imperial Majesty, he prayed them to lay afide all other business and debates. and come to a quick refolution about raifing Men and Money, fufficient to enable the Imperial Army, if not to raise the Siege, yet to keep the Field, and prevent the farther progress of the Turkish Arms: which they promised to do. And immediately thereupon, the respective Deputies dispatched away Letters to their Principals, to acquaint them them with the Resolves of the Dyet. Whereupon the Duke of Bavaria drew his Forces together with all imaginable expedition; and as the Vaunt-guard of his Troops, dispatched a Regiment of Foot, and another of Horse, to joyn the Duke of Lorrain; whom they sound posted about ten Leagues on this side Vienna, his Camp strongly fortified, and in good order; his Army consisting in Horse, Foot and Dragoons, of no less than 35000 effectual men, with the which he intended, as soon as the Troops joyned him, to sight the Grand Visier, or oblige him to draw off from before the City, and raise the siege.

During these transactions, his Imperial Majesty remained at Passaw, soliciting the Christian Princes to draw together their Forces with all expedition, to oppose the Insidels; who with great labour and diligence advanced their Trenches, as knowing that if they linger the siege, the Christian Forces would be upon them, and oblige them to rise from before it: Therefore with their Batteries they fired incessantly, ruining a great part of the Wall near the Carin-

thian Gate; notwithstanding the bessed ed made a gallant and resolute desence, being in want neither of Ammunition nor Provision: Yet that all the Countrey round about was in a consternation inexpressible; the people through fear and amazement, slying every where throughout the Circle.

The Rebels taking advantage of the retreat of the Imperialists, desisted not to commit many and great outrages, burning and plundering all before them; when coming near Budekim, in the upper Silefia, the Governour of that Garrison fallied out upon them, and gave them a brisk incounter, but being overpowered with numbers, was obliged to retire with fome loss. This fo inraged the Rebels, that they resolved to attack that Fortress; and did it so successfully, that notwithstanding the resolute defence of the befieged, they carried it at the third affault, putting most of the Garrison to the Sword, and plundring without exception, all the Inhabitants. At which fiege, there ran a report, that Count Teckely was mortally wounded, and foon after, that he was dead; though it proved altogether a mistake, for he was not personally there, but acted by his Lieutenant. The loss of this place, greatly alarmed the neighbouring Garrisons, and obliged them to put themselves in an extraordinary posture of defence; especially, upon notice that to thousand Tartars were marching within twelve Leagues, to joyn the Rebels.

The Grand Visier, at the siege of Vienna did not at all spare his men, thinking by fuch resoluteness to daunt the besieged, and bring them the sooner to a Capitulation: To come to which, he has not only by Letters shot in upon Arrows; but by other means, as fending his Letters by captive Austrians, made large Promifes, and large Threats; on the one hand, affuring them of Liberty, free exercite of Religion, and indempnity of their Persons and Estates: On the other, he magnified the Force, Power, and Refolution of his Mafter, fwearing by Mahumet, if they stood our to extremity, and obliged him to take it by storm, which he was resolved to do, for that no relief was to be hoped for

for on their part; he would put all to the Sword, without exception, and that the most obstinate in opposing his demands, should expire by the most exquisite torments. But these threats or promifes were too low and mean to have any effects, or make any impression on the minds of men of bravery and resolution, who had devoted their lives to the defence of that City, and the prefervation of the Emperours honour; though indeed some of the pusillani-. mous Burghers, looking back upon their Wives and Children, were for yielding up the place; for which, and for mutinying upon that occasion, as a terrour to the rest, five or fix of them were executed, and an Order published, That under severe penalties, no man should be so hardy, as once to name or mention any thing tending to a Surrender.

The Visier, thus frustrated in his hopes and expectation, gave order to raise another Battery against the new Bulwark, from which he battered it incessantly for 16 hours with great fury; but in the end had most of his Cannon dismounted difinounted by the befieged, and a fally made upon the Trenches; in which 300 Turks were killed, and of the Imperialists fifty; amongst whom was a Captain of Horse and an Ensign-bearer: But what more conduced to the advantage of the Imperialists, under the favour of this action the Pioneers filled up divers of their Works, and broke into their Mines in divers places, which they discovered by sounding them. The Count Staremberg Governour of the place, omitted no labour nor industry to defend it, giving most remarkable proofs of his conduct and courage, to the great incouragement of those that ferved under him; for where-ever the Walls were most rent and shattered. and the Cannon played most furiously, there would he be, labouring at the Works fometimes with his own hands, and at other times incouraging his Souldiers with words and rewards.

By this time, the Turks having finished three new Batteries, began to throw their Bombs, which ruined divers houses; to prevent which, many of those that were nearest to the Wall,

the Befieged covered with Earth, especially the flat roofed ones, which most in that City are: which strategem hindered frequently the Bombs from doing their defired execution. When in the mean time, the German Engineers having from the Bulwarks levelled their Cannon against the Turkish Batteries, broke and difmounted most of their Cannon, ruining, and for the most part demolishing the Batteries, killing a great number of the Infidels: Infomuch that the Visier sent to the Count, to demand a ceffation for fome hours, to bury the dead; but indeed to repair the Batteries, though it was not conjectured that less than 300 slain lay scattered up and down, whose noysome smell greatly infected the Turkish Camp: nor was the imperious Turk contented to make this demand only, but according to the wonted pride of the Ottomans, he by the same Messenger gave him a second time to understand, That in case he did not in time furrender the place, but obstinately held out, till it should be taken by ftorm, he would put Men, Women, and Children to the Sword. To

To which the Count as boldly, and fouldier-like, returned answer: That his menaces might be spared; that for his part, he knew better how to defend the place, than ever to think of furrendring it, of which by his actions he would convince him; nor would he confent to any ceffation. This answer made the Turk fume and chafe exceedingly, but in vain; for although he commanded all the Cannon to play incessantly all the 11 and 22 of July, yet they did little execution; or if they did, the Citizens and others, who laboured therein, repaired it, and where ever the fiercest battery happened, there they countermured and raifed Rampiers of earth to hinder the shaking of the Wall: Nor did he only batter, but commanded his men to give an attack upon the Ravelin in three places, their Officers thrusting and beating such on as lagged or feemed unwilling to press forward; but in this they were altogether unfuccesful; for what by the Cannon from the Work, and the Town, and volleys of small shot fro n the Palizadoes and Breft-works, they E 5 were

were forced to retire 2000 less than they came on.

The war remaining at this point, the Duke of Lorrain having received a supply of 5000 men, the better to encourage the besieged, drew near the City, incamping with his whole Army at Krembs on the Danube about three Leagues and a halffrom Vienna, within hearing of the Cannon, and fight of the Leaguer; and there received advice from the King of Poland, That he was upon his march with an Army of 40000 effectual men, and that by the 20 of August, he would be before Vienna, and oblige the Turks to rife, or come to a general Battle; which advice he caused to be conveyed to the befieged by a Fisherman, who adventured to swim over the River; and thereby so incouraged them, that the next morning they made another fally upon the Iurks, and finding them altogether unprepared, made a great flaughter, beating them out of their Trenches, and throwing down their Works; which so much alarmed the Camp, that the Visier suspected the Imperial Army was at hand, and therefore fore immediately drew up into Battalia, commanding 1000 Janizaries, and 2000 Spahies to fuccour the Leaguers that maintained the Works; upon whose arrival, the Imperialifts returned into the City, having killed between 3 or 400 of the enemies, and taken eight Enfigns: Which negligence of duty in the Turks, the Visier punished by the death of the Zangiack, that command. ed in chief on part of the Works. This action was no fooner over, but the Duke of Lorrain had notice by his Scouts, that a great convoy of Provifion and Ammunition was on its way to the Turks Camp before Vienna: He commanded out a strong party to attack it, who accordingly did; but finding the Turks that guarded it, obstinate, and not willing to furrender it without blows, a sharp dispute happened, and continued hot for the space of two hours, in which time 600 Turks being killed upon the place, the rest fled, some to the Camp, and others to Count Teckely, who lyes on the frontiers of Silefia; leaving the Baggage to the Imperialists, who loft 58 men in this action; but in the .. the end brought their booty to the Camp, computed worth 40000 Dollars: for it confisted of 1000 Waggons

all well laden.

The Imperial Ministers in the name of his Imperial Majesty, having motioned to the Count a' Creey, the French Minifter. That the Troops of that Crown might not molest the Empire, nor any of its dependences during his Imperial Majesties being involved in war with the Turk: The faid Count sent to acquaint the King his Master with what had been proposed; and having received Instruction, on that affair, He on the 26 of July presented a memorial, wherein he acquainted them, That the King his Master would not take advantage of the condition the Empire is in, by reafon of the war with the Turks; but would make a truce with his Imperial Majesty for the space of thirty years, provided it be consented to before the end of August: Upon which Proposal, the Bishop of Aichstadt, the Imperial Minister, sent to acquaint his Imperial Majesty therewith; and to receive in-Aructions in that affair: the Electoral Colledge Colledge being of opinion. That it is absolutely necessary to conclude a peace with the Crown of France upon the Conditions proposed; and that thereupon they shall be the better able to assist his Imperial Majesty with men and money to maintain the war against the Turk; for that they are at present obliged to keep Forces upon the frontiers to prevent the incursions of the French, who are roving abroad in parties: But the result of this affair, at this juncture of great importance to the Empire, as yet remains undetermined and doubtful.

During the Treaty between the Empire and Crown of France, the action grew warm at the fiege of Vienna; for the Turks continuing their Batteries, and pressing on the fiege, by running their Trenches, and covering with Bavins and Planks, to defend them from the small shot out of the Palizadoes and Flankers. The Imperialists on the 24 of July, made another brisk sallie, with 3000 Foot and 2000 Horse, who charged the Turks with such sury in their Trenches, that they drove them out of divers divers works, which they had advanced hear the Ravelin, and filled them up, fetting fire to the Planks, and what elfewas combustible; and following their advantage, beat them to their main Works, and there disputed it at push of Pike, and But-end for half an hour: during which space, 7000 Turks advanced from the Camp to the relief of their fellows; when the Imperialists tired with the flaughter of the Infidels, of which (as some that were taken Prifoners fince, fay no less than) 4 or 5000 perished in the action, they retired into the Town, carrying Turks heads upon their Lances; which they afterwards planted upon stakes on the Bastions. This and the former carnages did so infect the air, that the smell and noyfomness caused a mortal sickness in the Turks Camp, and thereby obliged the Visier to remove with the greatest part of his Army 3 or 4 miles distant from the Walls: And moreover it was related by a Christian slave, who in the action made his escape, That the Turks in running their Trenches, did happen upon a great number of dead bodies, full full of putrefaction and contagious smells, who had been buried during the raging of the late Plague at Vienna; infomuch, that not being able to endure the scent, they were often obliged to discontinue the work, many of them thereupon falling mortally sick, and dying shortly after: So that here, as well the dead as the living contributed to the defence of the City. In the last fally

the Imperialists lost 160 men.

The Elector of Bavaria, by this time having drawn forth an Army of 13 or 14000 men, brought them to Passaw; where he drew them up, and exercised them in the presence of the Emperor, where they for the most part appeared wonderful dextrous in handling their Arms, swift and ready in their advances, and indeed expert in all military exercise, to the no small delight of the beholders. Scarcely was this over, but News came, That General Dunwalt having notice that 7 or 8000 Tartars were fallen into the upper Austria, he with fuch forces as he had under his command, and a confiderable Band of the Pealants, fell upon them as they were plundering, plundering, and so consequently divided, and not in any reasonable posture of defence, and after some dispute, put a great number of them to the Sword, took divers of them Prisoners, and delivered 2000 poor Christian Captives, which they were dragging after them in chains, as likewise recovered a considerable Booty, part of which he delivered to the owners, and the rest he di-

Aributed amongst his Souldiers.

These successes of the Imperialists, as they greatly difmayed the Turks and Rebels, so they animated the Imperialists, and the Princes of the Circles, inducing them to haften out their Troops, infomuch, that in a Conference held at Hasford the 27 of July, between the Bishop of Bamberg and Wirtsbourg, and the Deputies of the Elector of Brandenburg, the Princes of Hanspach, Bareith, &c. it was refolved, That the Troops of Franconia defigned for the affistance of the Emperour should begin their march on the 2 of August; it being conditioned, That the Bishop and Chapter of wirtsbourg, should for this service furnish out two Regiments of Foot, and four four Companies of Guards; and the Elector of Brandenburg, not reckoning his Quota, should assist the Emperour with a body of men under the command of the Velt Marshal Borsling: All which were immediately to be raised and sent to the Imperial camp, incamped between Krembs and Vienna, impatiently expecting those Auxiliary Troops. But from hence let us again return to the Siege of Vienna.

The Turks still pressing the siege in hopes to carry the Town by Storm, or oblige the besieged to surrender upon reasonable proposals, raised divers new Batteries in the stead of those the belieged's Cannon had ruined: Which Batteries they chiefly manage by Renegadoes of all Nations, to whom they give dou-They on the 30 of July made ble vay. three attacks near Scotenburg-Gate and the Red Tower, in which they were bravely repulfed by the befieged, who came to handy blows with them with great resolution; whilst the Cannon from the Flankers cut off the Turks in great numbers, and spared not to kill some of the Imperialists, who were mixed mixed, and fighting with the enemy. In these three attacks the Turks tost near 8000 men: Whereupon, the Grand Visier sent to demand a Cessation to fetch off the flain and wounded; but Count Staremberg returned answer, That he had no need of Truce, his Gariffon being all in good order. Turks scarce had time to breath, before the Imperialists making another fally, entred the Suburb called Leopolstadt; fome time fince possessed by the Turks; they beat them out, and put a confiderable number of men into it to defend it, it ferving as a Flanker to the Town, and playing furioufly against the Battery the Turks had raifed against the Scorch-Gate, difmounting all the Cannon, and ruining the Battery, though not without loss on their own part, the most Stout and resolute Souldiers still keeping the Walls; the Garrison consisting of 18000 fighting men, besides a great number of the Burghers, Scholars and religious persons of all Orders, who upon occasion are affishing. Nor is any thing of Ammunition or Provision wanting, but a plenty fufficient for several Months,

Months, according to the computation of those that by the Count's order took narrow furvey of the Magazines: Money being the thing most wanting, the Governour borrowed a confiderable fumm of the Religious Orders, promifing to restore it with addition, if the City escape falling into the hands of the enemy; and if it should so happen, yet to make reparation, if his life and liberty were preferved; the which money he freely and cheerfully at divers times distributed amongst his Souldiers: As likewise was so exact as to see the Provision fairly divided, that one has not more than another; thereby to prevent murmurs, animolities and mutinies: Causing the whole Garrison, as well Burghers as Souldiers, to take an Oath, To defend the place to the last extremity, and never to hearken to any proposals or overtures from the enemy, how advantagious soever they may be. These resolutions, equity and bravery in the Governour, contributed not a little to the resolution and courage of the Souldiers and Citizens, the very Women appearing every where couragious, gious, heartning and exciting their Hulbands to maintain and defend the City against the common Enemy without weariness or fainting. This great City, when the Turks first sat down before it, had no more than 15 or 1600 men in it, and not greatly provided with Ammunition and other necessaries; but as Providence had ordered it, just as it was invested, viz. on the 14 of fuly, four great Vessels came up the River laden with all manner of Necessaries, and within fight of the enemy, recovered the Port: Though few expected the day before, that the Turks would have attempted a fiege, in which they have always been unfortunate. For before this very City, much weaker than at prefent, Solyman the Magnificent lost 80000, or as some fay, 100000 men; and after all that he could do, being there in person, he was obliged to raife his fiege with shame and disgrace. The Duke of Lorrain likewise had the good luck to thrust in 13000 Foot, and 1000 Horse, befides which upon occasion, the Inhabitants can make 20000 fighting men; and happy was it for the City, that the Garrison

Garrison and Provision so luckily entered: for the next day the Ottoman Army so closely invested it, that it was a work of great difficulty for a single perfon to get in or out.

The Country round about Vienna is destroyed and laid wast: for upon the Turks first arrival, from the Walls and Towers of the City, might be feen 40 Villages in a flame at once; and daily for a week together, were brought into the Camp, droves of fuch miserable Christians as the Barbarians had surprized or taken in the Castles and small Fortreffes adjacent, which were not capable of standing out, but to save their lives furrendered; though they had better have dyed like Souldiers and men of courage, than fallen into the hands of io barbarous an enemy, from whom they can expect nothing but flavery: fo that great are the cryes and wailing of Women and Children; which when the Wind fat on the back of the Camp, could be diffinetly heard by the Befieged.

mand, marched with all dilligence to joyn the Imperial Army, and in joynt confederacy to relieve the befreged City, or to give the enemy battle. When in the mean while, the Duke of Lorrain having advice, that Count Teckely marched towards Presburg with a strong power of the Hungarian Rebels and Turks, the latter being fent him by the Bassa of Buda; and taking the advantage of the juncture of affairs, he intended to befiege it: He detached a strong party of Horse and Foot, and marched towards them with a resolution to give them battle; which Teckely little suspected, by reason the day before he had received advice, that he durst not come forth of his Camp, for fear of the Ottoman Army but too late finding his intelligence false, and that the Duke from the Walls of Presburg advanced towards him, he with his whole body of Turks and Hungarians, confifting of 25000 men, retired in the best order the small time would permit; but not fo fwiftly but that the Imperialists fell in with his Rear, making of them great flaughter, cutting off about 6 or 700 of them, and feizing upon most of their Baggage, Ammunition and Provision, taking in all 1000 Waggons: After which the Duke reinforced the Garrison, causing all the Boats that Teckely had brought thither, to bridge over the Danube, to be burnt; sending after him the Prince Lubomirskie, with the Polish Horse under his command: who for the space of eight miles, had the execution of the Rear-guard, which made a kind of a running fight, the Duke with the whole Army following close after. In this action the Imperialists and Poles lost 100 men, and the enemy 1500. After which. Count Teckely in great confusion repassed the Waag, and the Turks separating from him, returned to Newheusel, out of which Garrison most of them were drawn. The Duke stay'd upon the bank of the River Marck, two miles from Presburg, to have notice of their motion, as fearing they might wheel abour and fall into Moravia; fending after them General Dunwald with 1000 Light-Horse, continually to give him an account of what he could learn in relation lation to their inclination to action; and fo rifing with the part of the Army he had brought, he returned to his Camp near Krembs, upon the Danube, there to expect the Elector of Bavaria and the King of Poland, both which were near at hand, with a resolution to joyn him; thefe two Princes marching in person at the head of their Armies, both which Armies amount to 45000 fighting men, the flower of those Countrys. Upon whose approach, the Grand Vifier sent orders to the Bassa of Buda, to draw up a body of 20000 men, out of the neighbouring Garrisons, and dispatch them immediately to the Army, as likewife Ammunition and Provision with all speed; the Army, by reason of the late Convoys falling into the hands of the Imperialists, being much distressed for want of Provision: He likewise dispatched a Chiaus to the Grand Signior, to give him a relation of what had happened fince the fiege; wherein, as tome fugitives report, he gave the Chians a strict command, to affure him, that he would fuddenly fend him the Keys of Vienna: And as foon as he

he was departed, that he might inform the Grand Signior he left the Camp in action, he furiously battered the Red Tower, thundring incessantly against it with 12 pieces of Cannon and Culvering slinging Bullets of 52 and 58 pound weight; yet through the vigilance of the Desendants, did small damage besides renting the Battlements and Curtain of the Wall.

The Viceroy of Croatia, whilst these transactions were on foot, having drawn together 13000 men for the defence of that Countrey; having notice that a body of Tartars and Turks, the Refule of the Garrisonupon the Frontiers, were roving abroad, and had done great mischief in firing Villages, burning the Hay and Corn, ravishing the Women, putting the men to the Sword that were unable for fervice, and drowning the Children in the Rivers: To put a stop to this barbarous torrent, and to repay the inhumane Rake-Hells in their own coin. he drew out 1700 Horse and 5000 Foot, with which croffing the Country the nearest way, he on the 9 of August found them triumphing in all manner of rapine and and cruelty, when leaving 3000 Foot, and 1000 Horse under the covert of a woody Grove, he advanced with the rest towards the enemy; who being 6 or 7000 strong, after some consultation, threw themselves into a posture of defence, and prepared to give him Battle, with whom he as resolutely joyned, having first wheeled about, and taken the advantage of the Ground, so that he might train them into the Ambushment, and by that means inclose them; which fell out so to his expectation, that after a furious charge, the Ambufcade burst out at their back with loud shouts, which they seconded with so many messengers of death; the enemies being as it were taken in a toil, were killed on all fides, without making further refistance, all the Plain being strewed with their ruins and miserable flaughter, of which not above 2000 escaped, the rest being killed and taken Prisoners: Of the Croats in the first charge, 30 were killed, and as many wounded, and in all they lost but 120. By this action 700 Christians were delivered from miserable captivity, and 1000 head head of Cattle recovered, with much Baggage, and store of Provision, which they had gathered up in the Countries through which they had passed; and certain it is, had not a timely stop been put to this torrent, before it had swelled great, as it would soon have done by the conjunction of 8000 more of the same Tribe, who were advancing; but upon notice of evil success, retired: It would have put the whole Country into a great consternation and confusion.

Count Leslie being sent to secure Moravia from the incursions of the Enemy, with a Body of 4 or 5000 men, took a Convoy of 78 Waggons loaden with Ammunition and Provision, on its way to Teckely's Camp on the banks of the Waag, putting those that kept it, to flight, though without any more flaughter than of one man; for the Convoyers being aware of his coming, left the Waggons, and shifted for themselves in the Woods. To know the state of the besieged, the Duke of Lorrain on the 8 of August sent an Ingineer difguifed in Country habit, who under the favour of the Night paffed the Leaguers, and the next night F 2. had had the good fuccess to return in safety to the Imperial Camp; bringing an account, That the belieged were refolute in the defence of the City, full of courage and vigor, not having lost above 3000 men fince the fiege began; and that on the other hand, the Turks appeared less vigorous in their attempts than at first they did, and that they were in a manner distressed for want of Provision: a mortal sickness at the same time raging in the Camp, of which many dyed, they not being computed to have loft less than 20000 men in the divers attacks they have made in the fallies made by the befieged, and those that have perifhed by the Pestilence, besides Geveral Boars full of fick and wounded men, that have been fent up the Danube; whilst all the Troops of the Circles are on their march, and daily arrive at the Imperial Camp, fo that the Duke of Lorrain is 38000 strong, and will be 19000 frong, when the Brandenburg and Bavarian Troops have joyned him, who are daily expected; fo that in conjunction with the King of Poland, the Army will confift of 88 or 90000 fighting men, fo fo that a mortal battle must of necessity insue, if the Visier raise not his Siege before the latter end of this Month of August, 1683.

The Rebells having intelligence of the Duke of Lorrains being retired from the Walls of Presburg, with a body of 3000 Horse and Foot, fell into Moravia, of which the Duke had no fooner notice, but he commanded out a party of Polonian Horse to stay their advancing surther into that fruitful Country, which party had the fuccess they desired; for overtaking the Rebells as they were ravaging and plundering the Countrey, and a little before strengthened, by joyning a party before in those parts, under the command of the Prince of Licktensteyne, they charged them with such fury, that although they were inferior to them in number, they killed 5 or 600 upon the place, and took a like number Prisoners: Upon notice of which the Duke of Lorrain drew nearer to Vienna, . incamping with the gross of his Army at Enzesdorf, not far from Figura, to be ready to succour the besieged, if occasion require it. To whom daily re-F 3 forted forted the Troops of the Princes in motion, as the Electors of Bavaria, Brandenburg, Saxony; the Princes of Newburg, Hanault, and other Territories dependant on the Empire, coming different ways for their better convenience, bringing with them great store of Provifion: Which obliged the Turks to press on the fiege, battering the Town without intermission, and springing divers Mines, the Baffa not sparing the lives of his Men, but thrust them as it were into the mouth of Slaughter, fo that after the springing the Mines, which ruined a part of the befiegeds Out-works, they lodged upon the Counterscarp, and possessed it for the space of an Hour; when the befieged fallying, beat them out with great flaughter, infomuch that the Bodyes of the flain did not a little annoy the Imperialists, who used great diligence to countermine the Turks; which they did so successfully, that they met them in one of their Mines, and not only frustrated their design, but drove them out with great flaughter, feifing on the Powder they had brought to overthrow the Palizadoes, fo that maugre maugre the Ottoman stratagems, they prevailed little or nothing. For the befieged incouraged by the Count'd Staremberg their Governour, fought like Lyons, even in the Works and Breaches, made by the Turkish Cannon, where the Shot falls thickest; when to encourage the Souldiers the more, the Townsmen bring out their Stores of Provision. Yet the Turks continuing their Mines, lodged themselves under the advantage of a fifth or fixth Mine, sprung in the Ditch; but were foon fent thence with a showre of Shot shot from the Wall: Whereupon the Duke of Lorrain fent a man into the City, to know the state thereof, who by a certain fign given, affurred the Duke, that he was got fafe into it, which fignal was by hanging out a long blue Streamer upon the White-Tower of that City; he also received orders, to injoyn the Governour, if he perceived the Turks to advance fo far, as to indanger the place, he should hang out divers Flags, as fignals of the danger, and that rather than it should fall into the hands of the Enemy, he would attempt to raise the siege without any further delay, E4 but

but the befieged, though they loft a great many resolute Souldiers, and some Commanders of note, declined to hang out any fuch fignal of danger, but bravely defended their Works, though the Turks made frequent Affaults, as not expecting long to continue the fiege, whether it came to a Battle or not, by reason of the great scarcity in their Camp; which was occasioned by the Imperialists taking divers Convoys of Provision, infomuch that they fed upon Horse-flesh as dainty fare, and an Ammunition bread fold at five Dollars; all their Forrage for their Horses being so little, that 300 were starved to death in one Week. Yet the Bassa sent again to fummon the City, making larger offers than formerly, with many promifes of Liberty, free exercise of Religion, and other immunities; which were rejected with disdain: Whereupon he commanded a general affault to be made, which on the 5 and 6 of August was continued, almost without intermisfion, thinking so to tire out the belieged, and by that means oblige them to a furrender; but so far were they from acquiring acquiring what they aimed at, that after they had polleffed themselves of one point of the Counterscarp, the besieged sprung a mine before the Work, blowing about 100 of the Insidels into the Air, and following the advantage, sallied at two or three Ports, upon which a sharp conslict began, coming at length to handy-blows, in which it was not supposed, that less than 2000 of the Besiegers fell, though at the same time they played against the wall from 7 Batteries.

The City making a brave defence, a party of Imperial Horse passing the Danube, fell upon 300 Turks, who had posted themselves in a small Island of that River, and put most of them to the Sword, bringing away 200 Camels laden with provision, as also a great deal of rich Furniture: Of which fuccess the Duke of Lorrain had no fooner received advice, but another Messenger brought him a Letter from the King of Poland to: give his Highness an account, that he with his Army, confiffing of between 30 and 40000 men, would be within fight of Vienna by the 20 of August, and that he marched in three bodies for the better better conveniency and speed, desiring the Duke not to hazzard any thing till his arrival; upon notice of which, the Emperour nominated the Count Schafgares to go and complement that King at his arrival on the Frontiers. Prince Lubomirski being the mean while abroad, incountered a party of the Hungarian Rebels, as they were plundering on the Borders of Silefia, and put them to the rout, killing 300 of them upon the place, and took 31 Prisoners, and 8 Ensigns, with the loss of eight of his men, and ten wounded. Yet had not the Palatine of Hungary the like fuccess, for during his march towards Croatia, to joyn the Viceroy, most of his Souldiers being Hungarians, deferted him by night, the greater part of them joyning with the Rebells.

The Turks being earnest to subdue Vienna before the arrival of the Poles, on the 16 of August made a terrible assault, which they continued for the space of eight hours, springing several Mines, by which means they became masters of a Ravelin, and lodged themselves upon the Counterscarp; which caused the be-

fieged to make a brisk fally, and come to dint of Sword, fo that a bloody and doubtful fight infued: at what time the Christians being reinforced, the Turks were beaten out of the Works they had taken, with the loss of 5000 men, besides those that were wounded: Nor was the loss inconsiderable on the part of the Imperialists, for in this action. they loft 150 resolute Souldiers, and had near as many wounded; amongst the which, were Count Staremberg and the General Souches, who adventuring too far in pursuit of the enemy, received flight hurts, one being shot into the Legg with a Turkish Arrow, and the other by the springing a Mine.

This affault over, News was brought to the Imperial Camp, that Count Caprara was upon his way to the Imperial Court, and in his company a Turkish Aga, who had in charge to treat about raising the Siege of Vienna, which the Grand Signior was content to do in consideration that Commorra and Raab might be put into his hands, but these demands seemed so unreasonable and extravagant, that they took not effect.

And thus Reader have I given you an account of the state of this War, so dangerous to Christendom, from its strst breaking out, to this day, viz. The 16 of Angust, 1683. according to the best and most credible advice that could be procured, and to Heaven remit the success of the great event of the action at hand; the which may it happen prosperous to the Christians, ought to be the Prayer of every good Christian: And so I shall proceed to give you a tast of Turkish Cruelties used towards their Slaves, and such as they by force or fraud carry into miserable bondage.

Abrief relation of the Turkish Cruelties towards such Christians as they take Captives, with their manner of felling and disposing them, the Labours they put them to, and their several Orders; together with the bestiality used upon youths, Finale Children and Women, by the Turks; most lamentable and detestable to be told or thought.

Reader, having given you an account of the state of the War between the two Empires of Germany and Turky, I shall now proceed to a more particular relation of the Turkish cruelties towards such Ill-stared Christians, as have the missortune to fall into their hands, whose barbarity is such, that they know not how to shew mercy, nor have compassion upon poor suffering wretches, who continually groan under thrice worse than Agyptian bondage, having none on Earth to appeal to for mitigation of their miseries; yet such is the courage of most of them, that they will rather chuse to undergo their almost insupportable yoke under the tyranny of cruel Task-masters, than by base and unchristian cowardice deny the Lord, that bought them at the price of his precious blood, all their hopes upon earth being the expectation of the Christian Sword, under the leading of the Christian Princes. But to the purpose.

When at any time the Grand Signior has raised an Army for the invasion of any Christian Country, then like so many Vulturs or beafts of prey, a fort of Merchants, called by the Turks Men-Scorcers, hover about it in great numbers, to buy fuch Captives of the rude Souldiers as they shall take, either in War or by furprize; and for that purpose bring upon Camels, Mules, Dromedaries, all manner of Provision, Cloaths . and other Merchandise to truck, as likewife great bundles of Cords, and Chefts full of Chains, to tye or bind them together, in one of which they fasten about 50 or 60 together. These fort of the Devils vils Brokers, purchase of the Souldiers or Free-Booters, all the Captives that escape the Sword, with a proviso, That the tenth fall to the share of the Grand-Signior, or to the value, for they have liberty to purchase his Prisoners of the Tefftardar or chief Treasurer, or his Deputies; nor have they any Merchandize to profitable or fuch fure money as Slaves, whom they hale along like dogs, or drive before them like flocks of Sheep, for the most part naked, exposed to heat, cold and hunger: when if at any time they faint or are not able to go, they lay them cross a Horse, Mule, Camel or Dromedary, upon their Bellies, tying their Hands and Legs under the Belly of the Beast, as they use in England to carry Calves; but if they find them fick and not likely to recover, they cast them into the next ditch, and leave them to be devoted of Wolves and other voracious Beafts. Those that are aged. being accounted unprofitable, feldom escape the Sword, unless they are of such Eminency, that they expect a great ranfome for his restauration: And these miferable Christians they send all over the Empire, Empire, driving them from Market to Market like beafts, fo that fometimes they carry 2 or 300 in a drove, bound in feveral parcels, feeding them for the most part with Bread and Water, or Rice Cakes.

When they are newly captivated or bought, the first thing the Devil prompts their Patron or Masters to, is by sharp threats, mixed with fair promifes to induce them to renounce their Christianity, and perswade them to admit of Circumcifion; the which if they yield to, they find somewhat more civil treatment, but are for ever debared of returning to their own Country, or gaining their liberty: all hope, which is sometimes a comfort to the miserable, is taken away till death fet them free; and if, after they become Turks, they endeavour to escape, or return to the profession of the Christian Religion, the Lawis, That they shall be thrust into a hot Furnace. Such as are thought firm, and not subject to fly or defert their Patrons, are admitted to their Masters military imployments, and can only be made free when age renders them useless, and that that upon courtesie, for their extraordinary fervice in their Youth, or some notable exploit, or when the Master up-on being hurt in the war, or in great danger of death, bequeaths him liberty. They permit them to marry, but it is to make their posterity as well as themfelves miserable: for their Children, when they come to maturity, are made flaves as well as themselves; therefore those that consider the fatal consequences that attend fuch Matrimony, decline it. Those that refuse to be circumcised, or to renounce their Faith in Christ, are miserable, unless skilled in some extraordinary art, whereby they can greatly profit their Masters. Learned Men, Priests, and Gentlemen, not inured to hardship, or capable of any Mechanick art, are miserably dealt with; and the worse, that they by making known their miserable condition, by Letter, to their Friends in Christendom, if they have any, may thereby be moved to ransome them: They cause them to walk with naked Legs, Feet, Head, and Backs, feeding them with the bread of affliction; no new Cloaths ever fucceeding ceeding their old ones, unless a little course Linnen to hide their Privities. And in this miserable condition they hurry them over Rocks and Mountains, though never so rough and irksome to their gall'd bleeding Feet; so that many times one or other dyes for loss of blood issuing from his Feet, cut by Flints or sharp Marble, and so ends his wretched Life: Those that faulter or lag, they whip along with Scourges; and if they cannot, then they fasten them on horseback as aforesaid, and often torture them to make them confess what craft or handy labour they are skilled in. Upon buying these miserable wretches, they always feel their Joynts, to observe if they are strong set, well knit, and free from imperfection; they feel likewise their Hands, by the hardness or softness of which, they know whether they have been inured to labour or not; they have also especial regard to their Mouth, to observe if their Teeth be strong, firm fet, and found, that fo they be capable of eating Rice, Bisket, or any other course and hard Diet: And lastly, they take great notice of their Eyes, to fee if there there be no dulness nor blemish in them tending to blindness. From these observations, much the same as we use in buying Cattle, they conclude the goodness or badness of Captives. As for their Lodging, it is in an Out-shed, upon Stalks, Leaves of Trees, or courfe Mats, not being permitted to come within-doors, unless upon extraordinary occafion, let the weather be never so extream cold. As for the Women they are continually exposed to the horrid lusts of their Merchants or Buyers, locked up in strong places, and kept at hard labour, where you may hear continual howlings and wailings: Nor does the age of fix years protect female children from the horrid lust of these Infidels, nor the youths escape their filthy Sodomy, to which they are almost all of them addicted.

These poor wretches, viz. the men, some are yoked like Oxen, and forced to draw the plough, others keep Sheep upon the bleak Mountains, and some again till the Ground with Spades, dig up Trees, saw Timber, grind in Mills, wash Cloth, fetch Water, drain Fishponds, ponds, make Bricks, or the like servile Labours, to which they are hurried by day-light, and till night, continue at it without Meat or Drink, seldom being allowed any unless at night, unless they have some way to get money to purchase it.

Maids are feverally forced to perpetual labour, excluded both from the company and fight of Men, unless at such times as they attend their Mistresses to their Country Houses, to the Bath, or the Graves of their departed Friends.

If any Man be taken Prisoner, together with his Wife and Children, he is commonly disposed of to some Gentleman Turk, to be imployed in his Country house, there to labour in his Vineyard, till his Meadows, and plant Trees, look after his Cattle, and the like: all their Children being likewise made slaves; but if they persevere in the Christian Faith, there is a time allotted frequently for their delivery; but that is always in the choice of the Master, and at his courtese.

If after their making free, they are defirous to return into their own Countrey, they have Letter Patents given them for their Journey; but this is only to fuch as persevere in Christianity, for those that abjure it, are never suffered to return, though fome do now and then, by making escape; vet sometimes they are made free, but in lieu thereof pay a certain annual stipend to their Master, and the tenth of all they possess to the Grand Signior. But most miferable of all are those that are fold to Husbandmen, who for the most part make them draw the Plough or keep Sheep as aforesaid; those that are made Shepherds, feldom throughout the year come into any House, but wander from Mountain to Mountain according as they can find Pasture; yet have the Master and Dame a Tent and a Curtain, one to lye and reside in, the other to carry all their Furniture and Provision: As for the Priests and Clergymen, they do not only lay heavy tasks upon them, but expose them to all ignominy and fcorn possibly, yet greatly rejoyce when by perswasion or compulsion, they can oblige any one of them to renounce their faith.

Some

Some Turks have more humanity, and abate fomething of this rigorous usage, giving their Slaves now and then a small Stipend, which they mostly keep to defray their charges into Christendom, if ever they obtain their liberty; yet in this donation they have politick ends, which are to oblige them not to run away, or to induce them to imbrace the Mahumetan fuperstition. For seldom it is that they give any thing to fuch as are already turned Mahumetans, knowing that at the peril of their lives, they attempt their flight. Their beating is unmerciful, infomuch that fome of them lye by it 6 or 7 Weeks, and many there are that never recover, which the Turk no otherways regardeth than for his profit: for could he make as much of a Christian dead as alive, they would fuffer few or none within their power to live. Thus is the usage of the Slaves that fall into the hands of common Turks: And now Ishall, Reader, give you an account of the treatments of fuch as fall to the Grand Signior by decimation, and are referved for his use.

The

The old in years, he fells for Hufbandmen, to be fure if any fuch happen amongst his share of Prisoners, but rarely do they; for for the most part, the Sword devours them; these yield him but a finall and inconfiderable price, yet will they not permit them to be ranfomed for thrice the value they yield. The young Men and Maids, they confine in the Seraglios, there to be taught and instructed in useful Arts, as making Bows, Arrows, Carpets, and the like; but first they oblige them to a renuntiation of their Faith, and to be Circumcifed, diligently observing their Lineaments. Features, and the like; as also their promptWit and aptness, and accordingly they bring them up, some to Artifices, others to learn the Mahumetan Law, others to exercise Arms, and allow them a stipend of two or three Aspers a day, to provide them with Cloaths and Diet, till they are perfected, 60 of which Afpers make a Crown English. Over them they have fevere Task-mafters, to exact a daily account of their Exercise; and if they perform it not, then are they unmercifully beaten with Rods, Staves, or other things of more cruel invention. When they begin to grow perfect, they are inrolled, some in the order of the Bowmen, other some in the order of the Janizaries, and those that have lovely Faces are exposed to the horrid and so-domitical lust of their abominable lords; and for that purpose the Genitals are cut away: so that when they have been used as long as the Turk thinks convenient, then are they put to the offices of Eunuchs, to attend on the Lady-Concubines Horses, Mules, or some Kitchen imploy.

Virgins, fuch as are of extraordinary beauty, comeliness or composition of Body, are chosen out for Concubines, and thrust into a more narrow retirement. Those that are but indisferent handsome, they put to attend upon others, and to wash the privy parts of the Turkish Women after they have evacuated, which is a thing always observed amongst them. Others they imploy at spinning, winding Silk, weaving Carpets, carding Wooll, and the like, having sirst obliged them to renounce the Christian Faith; for no Christian may be fuffered to inhabit within the Wall of the Seraglio; and from these are cut off all hopes of returning into their own Countrey, being obliged in a strong. and barbarous Land, to bewail their hard fates and wretched Captivity, wishing that they had fallen by the Sword amongst their Friends, rather than to be excluded from all humane fociety, unless such as is more detestable and hateful to them than Cimmerian darkness it self, which frequently drives them into fuch despair, that they lay violent hands upon themselves, chusing strangling rather than life, others pine away, and some starve themselves to death on purpose, others are beaten till of the blows and bruifes they expire, and thus miferable wretches is their state under the triumphing tyranny of the barbarous Infidels, who know not how to shew mercy.

The manner of making Christians Turks, and to renounce their Christian Religion is thus: The Musti, or Chief Priest, or some of his Agents, after the Circumcision, which is done by cutting off their Foreskin with a sharp sharp Knife, obliges them to say these words in the Turkish Language after them, viz. Law illawheh illaw Allawh Muhammed resoul Allawh: that rendred into English is thus, There is no God but one alone, and Mahumet is his Messenger or Prophet. The Women and Virgins only fay the words, as not being capable of the former part of the Ceremony. Another way the Grand Signior has to get Slaves than by War, viz. All the Christian Provinces, his tributaries, or fuch Christians as live in his dominions, pay tribute-Children, having their Children fnatched from them at the age of three or four years, and these are taught the Mahumetan Superstition, and put under the tutorage of divers fevere Masters, to be instructed and educated in all manner of Arts, but especially in feats of Arms, and out of these they chuse the Janizaries and Spahi, which are for Horse and Foot, the support of the Ottoman Empire, being more deadly enemies to the Christians than natural born Turks.

From these and the like miseries poor wretches divers times attempt making their escape, which they cannot do without great danger and hazzard of their lives, especially such as are in Afia, for they have no way to get into Europe, but by fwimming over the Hellespont into Europe, which cannot be effected without great danger, and frequent loss of Lives. But because many may imagine that in fo large a dominion, these poor wretches may eafily shift from their cruel Masters, especially such as are imployed abroad, I shall to convince that, speak something of that matter, and so proceed to give a more particular account of the present miseries of Hungary and Anstria, than in the series of this History has occurred.

European Slaves indeed with more facility make their escapes than those that are sold into Asia, Azypt, and the Islands of the Sea, by reason they have only Rivers to pass, which for the most part, at some place or another are fordable, or so narrow that they may easily be swum over; but such as are in Asia, must of necessity pass the Hellespont, as is asore-said, faid, and such as design it, for the most part, attempt it in Harvest time, by that means sheltering themselves in fields of Corn all day, and by night travel; Corn and Herbs being their only Food, the greatest part of their Journey, they carrying no other Provision than Salt, to season them; and in this manner their lives are exposed to ravening Wolves, Bears and Lyons, choosing rather to be devoured, it should happen so, then to return to their Currish Masters, whose mercies are cruelty.

When they come to the Hellespont, between Callipolis and the Towns of Sestos and Abydos, which guard the Straight, called by the Turks, Begaz Asser, they cut down Timber, and make Floats or Rasts, upon which they get, sometimes to the number of 20 or 30, carrying nothing with them but Salt and Herbs, when if the Wind prove savourable, they are wasted to the European Shoar, in five or six Hours, which they conclude a fortunate sign, or presage of their escaping out of miserable thraldom; but if the wind prove contrary, or the Sea rage high, they are carryed away with the

the stream into the main Ocean, where they inevitably perish, unless some Ship. happen in time to take them up, or sometimes being forced back upon the Asian Shore, they fall into the hands of their pursuers; but if they can attain the wished Shoar, they betake themselves to the Mountains, and by the guidance of the Stars, pass North and Northwest, living upon Roots, Acorns and Herbs; unless now and then they can plunder a Shepherds Tent of Provision, in attempting of which fome of them are frequently killed, and fometimes they kill the Turks; but if they chance to be taken and returned to their old. Masters, then woe is them, their condition is more miserable than before, and better it had been for them, if they had dyed ere they had been born; for then they are not only loaded with chains of Iron about their Wastes and Necks, of an extraordinary weight, which bend them almost double, and obliged to wear them during the pleasure of their cruel Patron, and in the mean time work and labour not only like Horses, but hung ; G 3 hung up by the Heels, and scourged till deep furrows are made in their Backs and Sides, and in that bleeding and wretched posture, rubbed over with Gunpowder, Salt-Peter or powder of Glass; and there suffered to hang in miserable torment, till order is given for their taking down, which fometimes is not the pleafure of the imperious Turk under eight or ten Hours; so that in vain they wish for death that frees them. have the Soals of their Feet gashed or ripped, and Salt rammed into the Wounds with Sticks or Irons made for that purpose. Some again they confine in dark and difinal Dungeons full of Toads, Mice, and all manner of noisome and offensive Vermine; where they many times fuffer them to perish through Hunger, Thirst; Cold or noysomeness of the place; or fometimes to rid themfelves of a miferable life, they rathly and unadvisedly dash their own Brains out against the Walls. And thus, Reader, is the miserable state of such as fall into the hands of the merciles merciless barbarians, though in their flight they are often affifted by the Greeks, who are Christians, these men hazzarding their Lives and confiscation of all their Goods frequently to preferve them; for such is the Law, that if any under the Grand Signiors protection shall be aiding or concealing, maintaining or comforting Slaves in their flight. These good men, often, notwithstanding do harbour them in their Houses. and procure Shipping for their passage into Italy, or other Christian Countreys; but in these attempts more lose their Lives by the dangers of Travelling, Shipwrack, Enemies, wild-Beafts, and starving, than escape, or possibly can escape.

The Turks have an incantation, which they hold effectual to prevent the flight of their Slaves, which thus they perform: The name of the Slave they write in parchment, and hang it up in the House or Tent, according as they are furnished; for some of them have no Houses, but wander after their Flocks in Tents, the which having done with horrible Curses and Imprecations, they charge.

charge the Slave, if ever he attempt to escape, swearing by Mahumet, that all the curse that can be invented will befal him, if he do; conceiving that this by the help of the Devil, will afright the fugitive, with the fear of meeting Lyons, Bears, Dragons, Tigers, and Wolves, in his way, that he shall perish by hunger, be swallowed up by the Rivers, or be intombed in the depth of the Sea, or that the Heavens will. grow difmal and black, and tempestuous storms arise, insomuch that these astonishments will bring him back, and indeed they have their wished effects upon the Mahumetan Slaves: but those that believe in Christ, and revere his name, cannot be Bug-beared with things altogether ridiculous and infignificant 5 and therefore after fuch they look more narrowly, having fpies in divers parts to give notice of their flight, and to purfue them, between whom and the Fugitives happen sharp incounters, infomuch, that some on either side are frequently killed, the Slaves chufing rather to dye fighting like men, than to be brought back, to be cortured and uled used worse than Dogs; if those that are returned have killed any person, although in their own defence, then are they dipped over Head and Ears in a Cauldron of boyling Oyl; then taken out, being alive, and cast into a deep Dungeon, and there suffered to perish, or else have their flesh launced, and being rubbed over with Honey, or some fweet liquor, are hanged up alive for the Bees, Hornets, Wasps, and such Infects to prey upon: and in that miserable condition, frequently do the Vulturs and other rapacious Fowl feed upon and tear them, whilst living, and in this condition some hang 4 or 5, nay sometimes 6 or 7 dayes, before they dye: Others they wrap up in Bears Skins, or Swines Skins, and expose them to the fury of Dogs, with which they bait them to Death. These and many more are the Torments these poor Creatures indure, under their cruel Masters.

Those that are taken by the Tartars are worse used, if worse can possible be, for they having little or no imployment, for them, (as being a roving, thievish, and uncivilized people, living altogether upon theft and rapine, especially that part adjoyning to Christendom) they keep them in dark places, cruelly beating and torturing them, thereby to oblige them to fend their lamentable stories to their Friends in Christendom, (which indeed are such as might move hearts of Flint) thereby to incite and Hir them up to purchase them at great Ranfoms: for to that end do the Tartars carry them away, and if they find within one year, that no enquiry is made after them, nor any ransome likely to be obtained; then do they fell them to the Turks; of which viciffitude divers of them are glad, although the change is most miserable, for as the old Proverb amongst us is, They, as it were, leap out of the Frying-pan into the Fire.

And thus Reader, are the miseries of poor afflicted Captives, whose part, during their being inservice, none dare take but Heaven, to whom they sigh and cry aloud for deliverance, filling the Air with plaints, lamentations and woes still groaning under the oppressing tyranny of their cruel Task-masters, who exceed those of Agypt, for they not only

only oblige them to make Brick without Straw, but feed them continually with Bread of Affliction, stripes, and daily menaces, tempting them hourly to deny the Lord that bought them with his precious blood, thereby everlastingly to damn their precious and immortal Souls; whose name, they to their grief, are obliged to hear blaspheemed, reproached, and his Godhead reviled and contemped.
